Conference examines sexism

By KRISTIN O'KEEFE
Special to The Jambar

Last Friday, while most of YSU was packing it in for another week, 62 administrators, faculty and students were climbing on a bus.

Destination — Bethany Conference, Bethany, W. Va. Objective — to recognize sexism in communication.

This year's conference, "Sexism in Communication," was designed to shed some light on key issues concerning sexism in language, both subtle and obvious. The two-day seminar was sponsored by Student Government and Student Services.

Theodore Chandler of Florida Keys Community College, led the seminar in a style that prompted the assembled group to share their opinions and experiences.

Dr. George Letchworth, director of Counseling and Health Services, as well as advisor to the Bethany Workshop Committee, said that the conference was a "significant University event."

Letchworth, who has advised the committee for nearly 10 years, said that this conference's turnout was "the largest we've had for several years."

He said that the committee decided on sexism as the theme because it came up enough in last year's discussions to indicate a need for further awareness in the area.

One of the YSU administrators in attendance at the seminar, Dr. Edna Neal, executive assistant to the vice president of Student Services, was enthusiastic about this year's event.

"I was very pleased that we had a large number of students present and that we had positive interaction between faculty, administration and students," she remarked.

What exactly is sexism? It is any prejudice or discrimination based on sex. Another point made at the conference was that sexism is not always against females.

It was pointed out that generalizations are made about both sexes, sometimes unfairly to the individual.

Some of the seminar's participants said that they are now more aware of sexism in behavior.

Dr. Gordon Mapley, assistant dean of Arts & Sciences, said he became more aware of other aspects of sexism.

"I was surprised because of incidents of sexist behavior on campus that we are not aware of," he said. "We need to be more aware of it."

Mapley also stressed the importance of developing a forum for letting people know about such incidents.

"If women are encountering sexism on campus, we need to know about it," he remarked.

Todd Vreeland, vice-president of Student Government, said he participated in the conference because he had heard from people that had attended one in the past that it "was a good experience."

Grief support group tackles problems of suffering

By LISA M. SOLLEY

Although death may seem like an ending point for some, it becomes the beginning for others.

Many lives are touched by the loss of someone special, especially a loved one, according to Elaine Curran, outreach coordinator for the Catholic Service League. Curran explained how a death affects the lives of the survivors. Those people must adjust and begin their lives over again.

Sharing grief, learning to cope and overcoming it through a supportive group is a service sponsored by the Catholic Service League for the Youngstown community.

Curran, Rev. Jim Ray, Campus Ministries and Sister Mary Ann Montaven, Newman Center, are bringing the idea of a bereavement support group to YSU.

"Our goal is to offer a supportive kind of healing," Curran explained. "If someone that was special to you has died, you need to be able to talk about it."

Curran came up with the idea of bringing the support group to the campus after some members of her support group began to express concern in how their children were feeling and how the loss was affecting them.

Curran said many of the parents tried to get their children to come to the support groups with them, but they refused. "Sometimes younger people feel that if they have to engage in a group support such as this that society will see them as defective or that something is wrong," Curran stated. "Sometimes children are more affected because they are so worried about the surviving parent and how they are coping, that they push away their own grief and feelings."

The three also voiced concern over the fact that many professors and others in the YSU community have died and they explained how a support such as this can help students as well as faculty cope with any grief or painful feelings.

The support group, however, is not limited to

Various schools seek YSU education grads

By SUEANN HINES

Does San Juan, Calif. really want teachers from YSU? Apparently so because San Juan is just one of the 19 school systems that will be conducting interviews for prospective teachers at YSU in February and March.

A teacher candidate sign-up was held on campus last Monday. The recruiting is a quarterly event. According to Carol Cook, coordinator for the sign-up, the winter quarter session, which took less than one hour to complete, had "more participation than ever."

At the sign-up each teacher candidate chooses the school systems that interest him; there is no limit to the number of schools the candidates can set up interviews with. A first come, first serve basis procedure is used, therefore many of the more popular school systems' interview schedules become filled very quickly.

Cook stressed to the students that they should sign their names to the no appointment (N/A) list even when the school's schedule is full. She said the school system would still receive the candidate's credentials and may contact him for an interview.

Also, if there is enough interest in a school that has no scheduled openings, that school may set up another series of interviews on campus, said Cook, and if cancellations occur, those on the N/A list will be contacted.

The interviews will be held in the Career Services Office and will last approximately 30 minutes.

Cook said, "If the students are willing to relocate, their chances for finding a teaching job improve." She added that "a lot of students are considering out of town jobs."

Cook said Ohio still has a teacher surplus, thus the need for looking out of state for education jobs. YSU's on-campus recruiting system enables the students to interview with these schools without having to do any long distance traveling.

But why would school systems such as Clark County, Las Vegas, Atlanta, Ga. and Elk Grove, Calif. recruit from YSU? According to Cook and Charles Whitman, director of Career Services, YSU's School of Education is highly rated.

Schools want YSU graduates because they know they will be good teachers, Cook and Whitman said.

Education: Fred Dolovy, a graduating art education major, signs up for an interview with a Maryland school system during Career Services on-campus recruiting. The event enabled graduating education students to set up interviews with various school systems around the country. Assisting Dolovy in scheduling an interview are Roseanne Meister and Bill Taylor, coordinators at Career Service.

Career search aids job seekers

By JONI DOBRAN
Jambar Staff Reporter

What should I include on my resume? What should I wear? What is the proper way to act? Thanks to the Plymouth Career Search Workshop, which was presented by Businessweek Careers magazine and hosted by YSU's Career Services, these queries and many others were addressed and answered.

The Program Lounge in Kilcawley Center was filled to capacity this past Tuesday as three representatives of Businessweek Careers spoke to the students, handed out workbooks, showed hypothetical video vignettes and fielded a question-and-answer session.

The representatives, Chris Barbero, Richard Brown and Cristina Palasits, each spoke about different topics concerning the job search.

Brown is a personnel expert who previously worked as a placement director at a youth employment program and hired and trained over 20 staff counselors. Palasits is a recent college graduate who has worked in commercial real estate and brokerage.

Barbero described herself as a perpetual college student who "wanted to stay in school forever." Though she started her career late in life, she's been a college professor and an administrator and is now with Businessweek.

Barbero said excitement over the workshop's topics united the three and that they would demonstrate how their techniques could help anyone find a job in any career.

"By coming here today," Barbero said, "you have made the only sure, reliable, solid, guaranteed-to-pay-off investment — and that being the investment in yourself."

She said that she would like to see the students accomplish two things after leaving the workshop. The first was to make a plan, the second to have a good mental approach.

At the start of the career search, she said each person should ask himself, "what do I want to do? What career do I want?"

The next steps were a catchy resume writing, successful interviewing techniques and finally, a follow-up after the interview.

She believes that a good mental approach is as equally important as a well-executed plan.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

VIEWPOINT

Graduation can never arrive too soon for friends, family

This week was the last time I had to go pick up my registration materials. It was the last time I would receive one of those little beige reminder cards claiming that it was once again time to register.

"YOU MUST HAVE YOUR YSU ID WITH YOU TO REGISTER" the card reminded YSU students in black, bold letters.

I felt like writing back, "THIS IS THE LAST TIME I EVER HAVE TO GO THROUGH REGISTRATION."

But the thought of wearing the honorable black robe and the mortar board hat that improves your posture kind of made me relax.

Spring graduation is just around the corner, so don't worry about it, I thought. Anyways, my college graduation is really for the pleasure of relatives — not higher education as most believe.

They're truly going to miss asking me that inevitable question, "So, just when are you graduating?"

I don't think I can adjust. Myself and surely countless other YSU students have had to answer that question from nosy friends and family. The average commuting student doesn't leave these hallowed halls within the usual four year higher education schedule.

"When are you going to graduate," Aunt Phoebe asked several years ago.

"Not for another five quarters," I answered.

"Won't that make it five years you've been going to college? Your cousin Gerald graduated from Purdue in three-and-half years. Why is it taking you so loooooong?" she asked, stressing the last word of her question.

"I am on YSU's extended higher learning plan," I answered politely.

"Extended higher learning plan?" Aunt Phoebe inquired.

"Yes. It's the plan for those students who can't become unattached from their parents' hips and can't bear the thought of leaving the beautifully landscaped lawns. Besides, seeing how long it takes to find a parking space in the morning becomes kind of a quest. Some giant corporation is thinking of creating a video about it," I answered.

I remember Aunt Phoebe walking away with a puzzled look on her face. But I must confess, fathers are the worst when it comes to the topic of graduation.

"Is this the quarter you're graduating?" dear ole dad inquired.

"No, dad. This isn't the quarter. I told you not until spring of 1992," I explained.

"You can't let time pass you by like this. You've got to get out in the world and experience the work force," my dad advised.

"I know dad. But nothing can compare to 16 credit hours, two jobs plus an active social life. Juggling all these activities sure will help me later in life. Just think how organized I'll be," I said.

That infamous day in June will come sooner than I think and my beloved friends and family will be sitting in the stands. All of them trying to find me amongst the other similarly attired graduates — pointing, staring, probably crying with joy that I'm finally graduating.

I can picture it now. Dad giving me a hug and whispering in my ear, "So, did you get a job yet?"

COMMENTARY

The Narrators make a simple Saturday night movie unbearable

The aroma of burnt popcorn filled the crowded theatre, full of people anxious for the latest Steve Guttenberg film to begin.

I was seated rather uncomfortably in a lumpy theatre chair, with feet glued to the floor by the sticky residue from a spilled soft drink. My friend forgot her glasses, so my neck was stiff from sitting in the fourth row. It's okay, I thought to myself. This should be a good movie.

And then, IT started. Yes, the movie had started, too. But, so did IT — my nightmare of all nightmares.

DEB SHAULIS

"That's him. Yeah, that's the killer. I know it's him," said someone loudly.

"Oh no," I moaned to myself. My neck ached even more as I looked imploringly at the theatre ceiling. Please, anything, ANYTHING but "The Narrators."

"Yeah, you're right. Ed saw the movie last night and he said it was that guy," was the loud statement from another person seated directly behind me.

Inside myself, I screamed obscenities at the top of my lungs. My hands began to shake, and I could feel my face getting hot. I looked over at my friend, but she was oblivious to everything but Steve Guttenberg.

The newest sequel to Nightmare at the Movies had begun.

I consider myself a very patient person. I have accepted the fact that my mother will always refer to me as her "little girl." I've realized that walking from Smokey Hollow to Cushman Hall on rainy Monday mornings is inevitable.

I just can't turn the other cheek — or in this case, the other ear — when someone insists on wasting MY $4 by describing the movie, scene by scene, frame by frame.

For a long time, I didn't even go to the See Commentary, page 11

LETTERS
Reviews parking priorities

Dear Editor,

U-N-I-V-E-R-S-I-T-Y. For some odd reason, I had always assumed that the main purpose of a university was to further one's education past the high school level.

Well, I'm being educated all right — I just learned something very interesting. Attendance at an athletic event seems to be more important than getting YSU students (who pay for their classes and parking permits) to night classes safely and on time.

Monday night, as I was driving down Spring Street to park for my class, I noticed little orange YSU cones up along the street. I also noticed little smocked YSU parking attendants standing at the entrances of two lots. I was soon informed that only "Special Permits" were allowed to park there and the reason being — a basketball game!

Well, heaven forbid a student should take up a basketball fan's parking space!

Seems to me there is a little priority mix up here. If these fans want to watch YSU play basketball so much, then let them put out that little extra effort and walk (in the dark) from a parking deck-like everyone else.

Senate discusses scheduling woes

By SUEANN HINES
 Jambar Copy Editor

YSU's Academic Senate held its second meeting of the new year last Wednesday; a report by the Academic Planning Committee dominated the senators' agenda.

Dr. Rama Krishnan, chairman of the committee, presented the report to the senate. In his interim report, Krishnan stated that his committee was currently working on a new scheduling policy.

Krishnan's report asked the senators not to make any changes in the scheduling policy adopted in 1983 until the policy can be evaluated. He said that a new policy is being considered by the committee.

Other business included a report submitted by the Library and Media Services Committee. They presented the 1987-88 allocation of segregated budget for library material and binding. The total allocation was $965,000.

Both of the motions were passed by the Senate.

The next Academic Senate meeting will be held March 4 in the Arts and Sciences Auditorium, DeBartolo Hall.

Group feels campuses suffer from sexism

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE — In what seemingly has become an annual condemnation, a leading national college women's group says campuses nationwide still are fundamentally inhospitable to women.

Women recently reported, is subtler, hiring practices are less sexist and male professors are friendlier, but college campuses remain a "chilly" place for most women students and faculty members.

Discrimination, the Washington-based Project on the Status and Education of

"While many men are not even aware they're being discriminatory," explained Bernice Sandler of the Project, which is part of the Association of American Colleges, "many women don't realize when they're being discriminated against."

Women are now getting better jobs in higher education, but have a harder time getting promotions than their male counterparts do, the report — called "The Campus Climate Revisited: Chilly for Women Faculty, Administrators and Graduate Students" — asserts.

And progress may slow in the near future, other observers say, because many people think most of the problems of college sexism are solved.

"Some say the 1970s was the decade for women, and now we're past that," said Judy Touchton of the American Council on Education's Office of Women in Higher Education.

"But we're not. There's a continuing need to keep women on the agenda. Our intention is to make sure lots of others talk about treatment of women in higher education."

So one reason for "The Campus Climate Revisited," which reprises many of the points made in the Project on the Status of Women's 1984 report, called "The Classroom Climate," is in part to "keep up the momentum" of change.

"There's lots being said and lots of studies and articles being written about what needs to be done," Touchton said. "It's hard to say how successful we are, but we want references to women and to discrimination in every report on higher education."

The new report notes few if any colleges still openly discriminate against women or even condone discrimination by ignoring it.

"Lots of overtly discriminatory practices on campuses have been handled," Sandler said. "Now it's more subtle, but people are more aware of the issues."

"There are people who believe that discrimination on campus has been solved once. See Discriminate, page 10

Famous pup takes bite out of crime

By ALISON BARRET
Special to The Jambar

He's traveled all over the country and now he's ready to "take a bite out of crime" at YSU.

McGruff, the Crime Dog, has teamed up with YSU's Campus Security to help promote crime prevention and safety awareness on campus and in the community.

McGruff, created by the National Crime Prevention Council and Ad Council, has become practically synonymous with crime prevention.

Since his arrival at YSU in September, McGruff has made appearances at several Penguin football games and the Crime Prevention/Awareness Fair held on campus this past fall.

Officer George Hammar of Campus Security said the department plans to involve McGruff in more programs in the future. "We hope to have another child fingerprinting program, which will include him."

Campus Security offers a number of programs and seminars dealing with self-defense, drug and alcohol abuse, crime prevention and other topics.

Hammar notes that while McGruff's audience is usually comprised of children, he is also ideal for adult audiences. The Crime Dog makes appearances at parades, malls, elementary schools, churches and service organizations.

At YSU, McGruff is currently portrayed by a University student trained by Campus Security.

Because the character is in demand and the costume expensive, Hammar said Campus Security often makes McGruff available to police departments in the Mahoning-Trumbull-Columbiana County area.

The Youngstown Police Department and Campus Security cooperate and coordinate appearances at functions and events.

Officer Hammar said practicing crime prevention habits such as locking doors and alerting police to suspicious persons and happenings will definitely help prevent and reduce crime.

Rock club selects bands, assures smooth sailing

By SUSANNA STEPHENSON
Special to The Jambar

If you are interested in rock or jazz music, then PAC's Rock and Jazz Club is for you. The Rock and Jazz Club is a student organization funded through the Program Activities Council and the YSU General Fee.

The group consists of 10-15 active members and is always open to new members said Vice-President Mark Lesinski, senior, School of Business. "We are always looking to get more people involved," said Lesinski.

The Rock and Jazz Club books groups that perform in the Chestnut Room of Kilcawley periodically throughout the school year. "We check out bands, either in person or by listening to tapes," Lesinski said. Selected groups are then scheduled to appear on campus.

"Good bands are hard to come by. We look for the best possible groups around. We are looking for good sound and production," Lesinski said. Club members are not only involved in the selection process but play other important roles as well. "We are responsible for making sure everything runs smoothly — the whole production," said Lesinski. Club members also provide accommodations for out-of-town performers and are active in promoting the events booked at the University.

"Membership is important for another reason," said Lesinski. "Bands and other performers that get booked are the ones we know about and like. The only opinions we can act on are the ones we are exposed to. The membership of the club will determine the kinds of bands that get booked," Lesinski said.

The club's busiest time is during fall and winter quarters since that is when most of the performances are booked, said Lesinski. "We work hand-in-hand with other elements of PAC to put it all together. Group members are involved with everything, from the selection of groups to the actual production of the performance. Anyone interested in contributing is welcome to the meetings," Lesinski said.

sharing experiences and talking with those suffering from a loss. The three constituents explained how they would like to also offer support and help to people known as caregivers.

A caregiver is a friend of someone who has experienced a loss. Curran pointed out how some people just do not know how to act or what to say to another who is grieving.

Losing someone special can provoke an array of feelings inside a person and it is important to talk with others about these feelings, according to Curran. However, this can become difficult because sometimes friends and others do not understand these feelings.

"You need to talk to someone about these feelings repeatedly and sometimes people get sick of hearing it. Especially if they have never had such an experience." Curran said. "They say, 'I can't take it, I've also had a rough day.'"

Dealing with a loss is different for everyone and no one knows what is the right or wrong thing to say and do, according to Curran. "There is no preparation for anyone and your friends have no idea what you are going through so they become distant," Curran said.

Montaven explained how people grieve over many different things and any type of loss can cause a person to experience grief and that a support group like this can be very beneficial.

"There are many people walking around grieving, feeling angry and being critical because they are unhappy with their own circumstance. They need to talk about those feelings."

Ray said that our society should learn to trust a little more. "It's a big world out there and we need to take a risk and trust people other than our friends and family. We have to stop being so isolated and learn to share our feelings with each other."

Curran said that the most important step for someone suffering from a loss is to let it out. She said the best thing a caregiver can do is to say, "I know you must be hurting, is there anything I can do to help?"

"If the person starts to cry, we automatically think we have said something wrong, but that's just not true. Crying is their relief," Curran said.

Curran and the others will be in the Cardinal Room, Kilcawley Center from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. next Thursday.

you let women in as teachers and administrators."

In most schools, Sandler continued, fewer than two women hold senior administrative positions, which promotes the idea that higher education is a career for men, not women.

"Progress has definitely been made," said Mary Gray, an American University math professor and president of the Women's Equity Action League. "It's easier for women to get a first job and to get tenure than it was years ago."

"Still, it's hard to move up in administrative positions or to get tenure at the most prestigious universities. Keeping up the momentum is hard."

The movement now is toward specific issues, often dealing with both sexes, Gray notes.

Now many campuses are adopting parental leave policies which apply to men as well as women, she explained. "The impetus for it is women, but when men see it as something that applies to them, it broadens the base of support."

"I now have a greater awareness of sexism that exists in books and in the classroom," he added.

Letchworth said he was pleased with the response from the participants but that "specific outcomes are difficult to measure since we were concerned with awareness and attitudes."

As far as what effects the awareness gained from the seminar will have on the University, Letchworth said, "I think it's going to be a tough job, but the idea of paying attention to the University publications seems to be a good start."

One of the closing topics at the seminar was holding a reunion of all participants and interested persons. Letchworth said he expects to make this a reality by early spring quarter.

A person's attitude towards finding a job must be one of "positivism, can-do, and should be filled with energy, enthusiasm and excitement," she said.

Barbero feels that a good thing to always remember is that although you do learn from experience, you can learn even more from mistakes.

At this point, the group watched the first vignette. The tape featured exaggerated mistakes that could be made while writing a resume, interviewing and in the follow-up process.

Barbero said that making even the most insignificant mistake, such as using correcting fluid to cover mistakes, could be fatal in a job search.

Brown was the next to speak and he talked of the self-assessment process that each person should undergo before looking for a job.

He said that self-assessment is the foundation of any job search, because "before you can begin writing a resume or go on an interview, you have to know what you want to do."

Knowing your likes and dislikes, strengths and weaknesses as well as past accomplishments are a main part of self-assessment, Brown said.

He also spoke of internships as being an excellent method of finding out what you really enjoy.

He told the students to ask their professors, friends and parents to help find any skills which may be hidden inside themselves.

According to Brown, values are also helpful in the self-assessment process. He told the group to ask themselves where they wanted to work, what size they would like the company to be and if they would move out of the country to work.

Brown concluded his talk by telling the students "to be realistic but don't sell yourself short."

After a goal has been selected and focused into one clear direction, targeting the resume can begin and Palasits discussed this.

Palasits said that preparing a resume is similar to selling a product in a commercial. "You are making an advertisement of yourself," she said.

She said an important thing to remember is to leave out extraneous data which may not be particularly relevant to landing a job.

She did go on to say however, that should the opportunity present itself during the interview, the extra information could be brought out as additional.

She stressed that although all information on a resume is vital, proper phrasing could mean the key to success.

Using dynamic action verbs such as instituted, supervised and implemented will draw more dramatic attention to ordinary skills, she also said.

She said that the "meat" which belongs on a resume are such things as internships, extra-curricular activities and work experience; anything relative to the job that you're applying for.

Palasits said a cover letter goes hand in hand with a resume and "it makes the employer want to go on and read your resume."

There are four steps involved with writing a cover letter: why you are writing; what your request is; why your experience is valuable; and a follow-up statement.

Although many people overlook follow-ups and feel they are unimportant, Palasits said this is not the case.

"It's important to be specific in stating the date and time that you will call them to try to set up an interview," she said.

She said that many people will be after the same job that you want. To make yourself stand out from the rest, she said, you must step up and be assertive.

"You have to keep your name in that person's mind and show your interest," she said. An excellent way of doing this is to send a thank you letter to the interviewer.

Even though you might not be interested in a job you interviewed for, a thank you letter is common courtesy and should immediately be sent, she said.

Palasits also encouraged a follow-up telephone call. "You never know what might happen. They might misplace your resume or be too busy to call you back," she said, recalling that she was once in that situation.

She said she feels if an employer tells you that the job went to someone else, it will help if you ask him why.

Barbero said the thing to always remember is that "you want your first impression to be your best impression."

She said a business suit is essential for both men and women because it is the most professional and it conveys the most serious attitude towards working.

The second guideline is that if a mistake must be made in dressing, then it should be that the outfit is too conservative. "There's always time for experimentation after you get the job," she said.

Lastly, she said to avoid detracting from what you are on the inside.

Brown told students to "be prepared and expect the unexpected."

He said a good way to be prepared is to get some background information on the company or business that you will be interviewing with.

The best way to do this, he said, is to go to your university's career services office.

He said an additional way to get information is to talk to the people who are actually in the business.

Concerning the interview, Brown said to be articulate and confident when speaking.

If the interviewer asks you to give a weakness, state the weakness but end it on a positive note. Finish with "I have been striving to correct that, however," Brown said.

He added that it is imperative to know what you want and to sell yourself to the interviewer.

For more job search information contact the Career Services office at ext. 3515 or stop in the office on the third floor of Jones Hall.

movies because of The Narrators. I grew tired of waiting to see the movies a year later on HBO, so I ventured out a few Saturday nights ago. Besides, I've grown attached to my hair, which my friend threatened to pull out by the roots if I chose not to go.

There I was, totally unprepared for any encounter I might have had with The Narrators. I had no earplugs, no dirty sweat socks to shove in the mouth of the people so hell-bent on ruining my night.

I did manage to cool off temporarily and concentrate on the show as hard as I could. Every two or three minutes, though, The Narrators started talking again.

"Look, now there he is! He's watching that girl. I know he's the killer," the first Narrator said.

"Uh-huh," said Narrator number two in agreement.

I ask you, when the nice lady who introduces the movie previews says, "Shhh! Loud talking is not appreciated by your neighbors," where ARE these people? Stocking up on Goobers and Raisinettes at the concession stand?

I looked around for an usher but, of course, there's never one around when you need one. In fact, I think ushers have been declared an extinct species in the past few years.

They sure manage to become extinct after they tear your ticket in half.

I thought of all the unsuccessful ways I tried to communicate with The Narrators in the past. Loud sighs, dirty looks, foot-tapping — it just doesn't cut it when you're dealing with these people.

"What's this guy doing? Hey, maybe he's the killer!" Narrator numero uno exclaimed.

"Uh-huh," agreed the second Narrator.

Oh sure, I thought to myself. Now you want to change your mind. I wasn't even concentrating on the show anymore.

And so it went, for almost two hours. Constant comments, loud conversation — and there wasn't a thing I could do about it. I was too stubborn to get up and walk out, and too cowardly to come face-to-face with The Narrators. Well, I was bound to lose my hair sooner or later.

"Get him! Get him with the mac!" were the cries of one excited Narrator at the film's conclusion.

"I can't believe this girl is stupid enough to walk in there by herself," stated the other Narrator.

My friend finally noticed how visibly upset I was. "Don't worry," she whispered, smiling. "It's only a movie." I told you she was oblivious to everything.

As we left the theater after the show, I walked out behind The Narrators. Funny — they didn't have a thing to say.

Surf's Up Committee plans YSU 'wipe out'

By SUE KNAPIC
Jambar Staff Reporter

Don your Hawaiian shirts and grab your scuba gear — the wave is back! Preparations are underway for Surf's Up IV.

In case you didn't attend last year, Surf's Up packed 2,300 people into Kilcawley Center for a night of drinking, dancing and fun. "This year we're limited to only 2,000 tickets," said Madonna Barwick, Surf's Up Committee chairperson, "and they'll be sold on a first come, first served basis."

The 1987 Surf's Up executive board consists of: Madonna Barwick, Surf's Up chairperson; Michelle Paolone, beachwear fashion coordinator; Michael Thomas, midweek contest coordinator; and Jennifer Burbick, summer exhibit coordinator.

So what should we expect this year? Once again the Fabulous Flashbacks will be performing in the Chestnut Room and disc jockey A.C. McCullough will be spinning you favorite tunes in the Pink Flamingo Room (Arby's).

You may notice a few changes in this year's itinerary however. Barwick explained that plastic wristbands will not be issued this year. Instead, those attending will purchase a ticket that they will have to bring for admittance along with identification if they plan to drink.

Also, the fashion show will be different than last year. Instead of having a large show area, stores will model their summerwear in Kilcawley's Arcade during Surf's Up week.

Some of this year's midweek contests include: an ice cream eating contest on Monday, Feb. 23; a beachball, volleyball and human pyramid contest on Tuesday, Feb. 24; a scavenger hunt on Wednesday, Feb. 25; a hula-hoop contest, limbo contest, best legs contest and an airband contest on Thursday, Feb. 26; and a mini-olympics to be held at the swimming pool in Beeghly Center on Friday, Feb. 27.

Why should you attend? "To break that cabin fever, to remember summer and because it's the biggest and best party on campus," said Barwick. "And each year it gets better," added Michael Thomas, midweek contest coordinator.

Tickets will be sold on Feb. 25 and 26. The cost will be $3 for YSU students (you must show your college ID) and $5 for guest passes.

'Wiped out': Surf's Up IV committee members take a break from decorating posters in the Programming Lounge Wednesday for the annual event, which begins Feb. 23.

Geldof succeeds with solo album

By JONI DOBRAN
Jambar Staff Reporter

When I first learned that Bob Geldof would be making his departure from the Boomtown Rats to pursue a solo career, I wasn't very happy about it.

After all, the Boomtown Rats are one of my all-time favorite groups. You know, "Mood Mambo," "Tonight," "I Don't Like Mondays" and the like.

The news hit me hard because during the time that he was organizing Band Aid and Live Aid, he said that he was looking forward to working on the next Rats album. My hopes stayed high.

So when Deep in the Heart of Nowhere was released, I figured that I would like Geldof's voice, but that would be about it. "This album will be a letdown," I said to my friends. Face it, no ordinary session musicians can capture the spirit and camaraderie of a band.

Boy was I wrong. I love this album.

Although it lacks some of the fire that's present on all of the Boomtown Rats LPs due to an abundance of slower-paced songs, Deep in the Heart of Nowhere is really good.

In the first place, there are no ordinary session musicians playing on this album. Geldof has people like Dave Stewart, Eric Clapton, Brian Setzer and many others helping him out.

Secondly, Geldof is a natural writer. He wrote all but one song, "Love Like a Rocket," which was co-written with Stewart.

"Love Like a Rocket" tells of the crumbling marriage between Terry and Julie, a couple who are still in love after 20 years but are unable to work out their problems.

If you were watching when MTV televised the final performance of the Amnesty International "Conspiracy of Hope Tour," you'll remember that "In the Pouring Rain" was the first song that Geldof performed with Little Steven and the Disciples of Soul.

"This Heartless Heart" and "Words From Heaven" are nearly opposite in their individual tales. The first is the story of a woman who shows no emotion whatsoever. The latter concerns a loving woman that everyone tries to unsuccessfully bring down ("Cos when they thought they had you/Stretched on racks/You refused to answer back").

Geldof included an autobiographical song, "When I Was Young," detailing his dismal life while growing up in Ireland. Because he often disagreed with or couldn't understand everybody else's rules, he tells us how he "would do a million things/Dreaming up a thousand schemes/I would change the world each night."

"August Was a Heavy Month" is the best ballad on the album. It tells of a dying woman's final days as she recounts her life. She relives memories, faces the anger that comes with death and eventually finds peace within herself as finally "winter comes at last."

Small dance leads to week-long event

By DEB SHALLIS
Jambar Entertainment Editor

What started out as something to chase the winter blues away is now one of YSU's most anxiously-awaited events.

Surf's Up began in 1984 when a few students and I thought it was getting boring around here in February," said Associate Director of Kilcawley Center K.J. Satrum. "It was just a monotony-breaker."

A dance was held at the end of winter quarter because "we planned on people leaving for Spring Break" afterwards, Satrum said.

"I'd seen it before," Satrum said, "but most schools didn't do it in the dead of winter."

PAC took charge of Surf's Up the following year and turned the modestly successful dance into a week-long celebration.

Review

Vocals that are almost spoken give "The Beat of the Night" a very eerie sound, adding greatly to a story about racial tension. The conflict ends in death: "A black man slumped up against the door/A brown man lay face down on the floor/A white woman sobbed on the second stair/And all the blood was red."

Strength is apparent in all of Geldof's songs. Strength in ourselves, in love, peace, joy and even strength in sorrow flow throughout the lyrics. Maybe we can learn something from Deep in the Heart of Nowhere.

Penguins face two rematches on road

By BRIAN J. MACALA
Jambar Sports Reporter

The last time Youngstown State and Tennessee Tech met on the basketball floor, records were dropping like a Tilman Bevely jump shot.

The Penguins set a team record for points scored in a 115-87 blowout. And 6-foot-4 forward Tilman Bevely tallied an Ohio Valley Conference record-tying 55 points.

Bevely's 55 stands as the best single game performance in the NCAA this year.

But head coach Mike Rice isn't getting over-confident about his Penguins' trip to the Golden Eagles' Hooper Eblen Center on Saturday.

"They have two parts to their game plan," Rice said. "One will be to stop Tilman. The second will be to gain revenge."

A victory would practically assure the Penguins of an OVC playoff berth. They are currently 2-6 in the league while the Golden Eagles, 5-15 on the season, sit in the basement at 0-8. The top seven teams advance to the playoffs.

After last Saturday's victory over arch-rival Akron Rice hinted at hopes of gaining a home post-season berth. The top four teams host a first-round game.

But the Penguins have since suffered a 64-63 loss to Detroit on Wednesday. Starters John Robinson and Robert Johnson did not make the trip for disciplinary reasons.

YSU may again be without over 23 points and 10 rebounds this weekend since Rice did not indicate of Robinson and Johnson will make the trip.

That would put more pressure on Bevely, who scored 32 on Wednesday. Bevely boosted his average to 23.6 points, placing him in the nation's top 20.

If Johnson misses the Tech game then sophomore James Wilson, who has been in Rice's doghouse, will start. It would be Wilson's first start in seven games.

Freshman Courtney Gilmore will replace Robinson.

The Penguins continue on the road Monday at OVC-leading Middle Tennessee. The Blue Raiders have won 26 straight home games dating back to an 82-76 loss to YSU on Feb. 23, 1985.

Penguin point producer: YSU's Tilman Bevely, the Penguins' leading scorer, will lead coach Mike Rice's team against Tennessee Tech Saturday night.

JOHN CHARIGNON/THE JAMBAR

Hits career high: Tanja Simone, a 5-foot-7 junior guard, scored a career-best 30 points in a losing cause for the Lady Penguins Wednesday night. She will help YSU try to get back on the winning track in an OVC battle Saturday at Tennessee Tech.

Lady Penguins travel to Tech for Ohio Valley tilt Saturday

YSU — Two weeks ago the Youngstown State Lady Penguins found out they weren't far from Ohio Valley Conference-leading Tennessee Tech.

The Golden Eagles had to rally in the second half at Beeghly Center to nudge the Penguins, 63-59.

Saturday night in Cookeville, Tenn., the Penguins will try to close that narrow gap as they invade the Hooper Eblen Center for an OVC rematch.

YSU may catch the Golden Eagles with a let-down. The Eagles suffered their first league loss on Monday, 94-85, to Middle Tennessee State. Tech enters the game 14-5 overall and 7-1 in the OVC.

The Golden Eagles feature an unbalanced scoring attack led by 6-foot-3 senior center Cheryl Taylor. Taylor was the team's scoring and rebounding leader last season and currently averages 23.1 points and 12.2 rebounds per game.

Although Taylor will prove formidable for the Penguins, only one other Tech starter is scoring in double figures. Tracey Munsey, a 5-foot-9 senior guard, is hitting at an 11.9-point clip this season.

Rounding out the Golden Eagle lineup are Melinda Clayton, Shawn Monday and Adrienne Black. Clayton, who averages 9.1 points and 6.2 rebounds a game, and Monday are freshman. Black is a returning letterman.

YSU is coming off Wednesday's 91-79 loss at Detroit that put the team below .500 at 10-11. The Penguins are 3-5 in the OVC.

Dorothy Bowers paces the Penguin attack with a 24.3 scoring average. Guard Tanja Simone, however, is fresh off her career-high 30-point performance against Detroit.

In the first meeting between the teams, Bowers scored 19 points and Julie Bray 14, but YSU was hurt by Bowers' foul trouble.

Following the battle against Tech, YSU continues its road trip Monday at Middle Tennessee. YSU lost to the Blue Raiders at Beeghly Center on Jan. 24.

YSU's next home game is next Saturday against Eastern Kentucky.

YSU loses with two starters suspended

DETROIT — Forward Brian Humes sank two free throws with 14 seconds left Wednesday night to lift Detroit to a 64-63 triumph over YSU in non-conference college basketball.

YSU, was playing without suspended starters Robert Johnson and John Robinson. The two were unable to travel with the team because they broke training rules, according to Greg Gulas, Sports Information Director.

The Penguins led 57-52 midway through the second half before Humes capped a 6-0 run with a three-point play to give the Titans a 58-57 edge with 9:04 left.

The Penguins regained the lead, 63-62 on forward Jim Gilmore's jumper with 2:08 remaining before Humes, who had missed his three previous free throw attempts, hit the winning points.

Detroit raced to a 35-22 lead midway through the first half, but the Penguins went on a 18-7 tear to cut the Titan's lead to 42-40 at intermission.

Youngstown took its first lead of the game, 46-44, on a jumper by guard Tilman Bevely with 17:34 left in the contest.

Humes finished with 25 points for Detroit, 6-15. Guard Archie Tullow added 13 points.

Bevely scored 26 of his game-high 32 points in the first half for the Penguins, 9-12. Center James Wilson added 15.

Lady Penguins fall at Detroit

DETROIT — Despite an outstanding effort by junior guard Tanja Simone, the Lady Penguins were handed a 91-79 non-conference loss at the hands of the University of Detroit Wednesday.

Simione scored a game and career-high 30 points, had eight assists and two steals. She sank 13 shots from the field.

Leading scorer Dorothy Bowers supported Simone with 20 points. Bowers also led the team in rebounds with eight.

YSU scored 49 second-half points, but could not recover from a 19-point halftime deficit.

The Penguins hit for 31 of 71 from the field and connected on 14 shots from the line in 17 attempts.

Detroit also sank 31 shots from the floor in 75 attempts, but made up the point margin at the foul line, sinking 24 of 30.

Detroit controlled the boards, as they outrebounded the Penguins 50-36.

Julie Bray and Margaret Sample each scored seven points for YSU. Debbie Burkett, who normally averages in double figures was held to four points.

YSU is now 10-11 and will meet Ohio Valley Conference leader Tennessee Tech. Saturday.

Humphrey receives donation

NILES — YSU President Neil D. Humphrey appeared Wednesday at the VIP Entertainment Complex in Niles to receive a scholarship donation from the Sanray Corporation.

The scholarship check is given annually from proceeds from the Sandalini's Man of the Year banquet. The amount of the check was unknown, but over the last 10 years nearly $70,000 has been raised.

YSU football coach Jim Tressell was a special guest at the banquet.

Network pairs foreign students with U.S. friends

By STACEY ANTHONY
Special to The Jambar

"Some students come to the U.S. not even knowing how to survive in a city, so they really need families to befriend them," said Susan Khawaja, coordinator of the International Student Office, in describing the purpose of the YSU American Friend Family Program.

The American Friend Family Program is a support network that pairs incoming foreign students with families from the surrounding community, stated Khawaja.

She added that many international students experience a sense of cultural shock and loss of family ties when they come to the U.S. She said they need the reassurance of a real, normal type of American family to help ease their discomfort.

The program's goal is to assist the students in this need by furnishing them with a family relationship in which they can find a sense of reality, comfort and acceptance, she said.

"This is the best thing that's happened to the cultural exchange students in the past three years," said Khawaja.

The program was originated in 1983 when it began as a YSU Women's Club project and then spread to the outside community by word of mouth. The volunteer committee that handles the program is comprised of basically off-campus, non-University personnel, according to Khawaja.

Twenty-eight families from the community were used to support students during this fall quarter.

Khawaja explained that a campaign for families to assist these students will begin in January for the spring quarter.

She said the committee recruits with care and especially looks for people capable of handling friendly, cultural relations while being skillful and understanding towards the students. After acceptance by the committee the families go through orientation and training in how to deal successfully with the anxieties, problems or questions that their assigned student may come to them with for help, said

Khawaja.

She explained that each family makes a commitment of two quarters during which they are obligated to meet with their student at least twice. After this commitment is met the individual participants are free to go their own ways or to continue a friendly relationship, said Khawaja. She added that the committee would like to change the commitment to one full year but there are not enough volunteer families to do this at this time.

The terms of the relationship are defined from the beginning with the students in that they undergo an orientation like the families do, said Khawaja. She said this is done so both parties will have no misunderstandings or possible problems about their relationship.

She explained this relationship as basically an advising and comforting situation since the families are not expected to contribute anything but an understanding ear, helpful advice, an occasional dinner or a place to spend the holidays.
