$17 million complex advances

By SUSAN KELLY
Jambar Editor

The $17 million Wick Oval student apartment complex project is moving ahead with the full support of the YSU Board of Trustees, although a pay raise for Dr. David Sweet is being taken under consideration and will be discussed in August at the next trustees' meeting.

Ruth Wilkes, former board chairwoman, said she completely agrees that the matter "needs to be delayed so that other options can be discussed."

She said some of those options might include deferred payments, performance standards or an increase in housing allowance.

A YSU Executive Committee meeting will be held in August to discuss the pay increase. Five trustees are members of the Executive Committee, and the remaining trustees are invited to attend the meetings.

The trustees approved 3 percent raises for YSU police and professional staff and 3.5 percent for classified staff beginning in September. Faculty contracts include a 3 percent pay increase this year plus $1,500 for those who are professors and $700 for associate and assistant professors.

Wilkes acknowledged that the trustees would address further housing projects once the Wick Oval enterprise is complete.

There have been recent changes in committee structure that Wilkes said will give more representation to the entire membership.

"Previously, we did not have every trustee on every committee. We functioned in smaller group committees. In the new structure, we will all have one voice," she said.

Business gets new major

By AIMEE CARROLL
Jambar Reporter

Those who like analytical problem solving in the business world can now put their skills to use.

The Williamson College of Business Administration added a new major in spring 2001.

YSU students can now receive a business degree with a major in economics.

YSU joins other state universities like Kent State University and The Ohio State University in offering the degree.

Gay Birnbaum, business academic adviser, said, previously students could graduate with a bachelor of art in economics through the College of Arts and Sciences.

Stephanie Smith, freshman, business economics, said, "I decided to attend YSU because they offered the business economic major. I was going to attend KSU until I found out that YSU offered business economics."

Dr. Samantha Carrington, business economics at the University of California, said, "Those who major in business economics are able to choose from a variety of careers."

She went on to say career positions could include management, staff economist and teaching.

Graduates can work in such areas as business, finance, banking, government, industry and nonprofit organizations.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics handbook concludes that the growing need for economic analysis is in virtually every industry, and this should result in more jobs for economists in the future.

According to the YSU Undergraduate Bulletin, requirements include Economics 3710, 3712, 4880, 12 semester hours of economics electives and 12 semester hours of business upper-division electives.

There is also an Economics club, which sponsors speakers and field trips related to the study of economics.

Atwater aspires to find streams of revenue for academic programs

By SUSAN KELLY
Jambar Editor

A chocolate brown silk shirt and tie in matching hues reflect the unassuming personality Dr. Tony Atwater, YSU's new provost and vice president of academic affairs.

At a small round conference table, his quiet manner and impeccable appearance are mesmerizing.

His vision for YSU, on the other hand, is entirely clear and professionally articulated.

Atwater has spoken. He views his command post as a vehicle to help create strong community ties.

He envisions YSU's student body as potential "scholar citizens," which, he said, "will be one of the ways in which universities of tomorrow will be able to hold their place in line. We need to work to garner community involvement."

His approach toward YSU's academic goals is multi-pronged. One area of focus will be in service learning, and another in experience-based opportunities.

He wants to see internships incorporated into the classroom rather than as separate courses of study. He plans to use corporate partnerships in the communities of Youngstown and Warren to help students connect to the social sector.

Atwater said studies have shown that universities must have a vision to include student preparation for employment in the social sector of society since the numbers of persons in these segments are growing.

One of his desires is to incorporate a program at YSU called American Humanities. There are in excess of 70 affiliates of Humanities nationwide.

The program trains and certifies students for employment in non-profit organizations. They are fully trained in diverse requirements such as grant writing, fund raising and other required documentation study.

"Another program, INROADS, would serve the students of YSU well," he said.

It is for students of color and meant to train, provide scholarships for, and place students in jobs, both in internships and eventually in permanent positions.

Atwater said the flat budget pressure is a challenge he welcomes.

"Sometimes it's easier for new people to see the good in a community and remind those living here its potential. With a team of new leaders, we should see a lot of good news."

— DR. TONY ATWATER
University provost

Dr. Tony Atwater officially takes over as provost Wednesday

"There are many other streams of revenue available, and this present circumstance becomes fodder for finding them."

He said there might be grants, federal and state contracts, increased productivity avenues to pursue, private giving on the external level and, "of course, efficiencies in spending."

His vision also includes public engagement in distance learning and distributed education. He would like to see more courses offered on weekends and in the evenings to accommodate YSU's mainstream students.

There is a smooth transition to the topic of the media. A background rich in journalism and

Ohio Business Week prompts ideas in high school students

By SHANNON WALLS
Jambar Editor

High school students will get a taste of college life for one week this summer, as YSU holds Ohio Business Week from Sunday through Aug. 4.

OBW is a one-week residential camp for high school students going into their sophomore, junior and senior years for the 2001-02 academic year. The program concentrates on teaching business skills, concepts and theories involved in free enterprise.

Both large and small businesses from around the state will participate in OBW to discuss topics such as the stock market, elements of cost, capital and finance and logistics/supply and demand.

Christine Shelton, coordinator of external relations, said, "YSU is very grateful for the support from the business community."

The students will stay in Kilcawley House and be on a very tight schedule the week of the program, according to Shelton. They will begin each day at 7:45 a.m. and end at 10:30 p.m.

They will be divided into groups of 10 to 12, forming companies that will each create one product and formulate a business operations plan and a marketing and financial plan.

Out of each group, a chief executive officer will be elected to motivate the students to do their best. The groups will present their results to a panel of judges and be ranked in first, second and third places.

"I hope Ohio Business Week gives students a better perspective of operations in business," said Shelton. "It's a hands-on type of program."

Career Services provides excellent guidance

Professionals offer assistance to alumni and students in job searching

By NICK MYERS
Jambar Reporter

Some students may not know this, but there is a place on campus where professionals would help students prepare for their futures, select their majors, write resumes, sharpen their interviewing skills, and find a job in their field of interest — all for free.

The Career Services department on campus assists students and alumni to accomplish these things. The department helps people gain basic computer skills needed in the workplace of today.

Joanne Gallagher, coordinator, Career Services, said this program has many options in aiding its clientele.

"The program offers help to its clientele in many ways," she said.

Someone can register for resume referral, said Gallagher, and this service helps him or her to write a resume, cover letter or even interview.

We conduct mock interviews with a professional who helps them with questions asked during real interviews.

She added that Career Services would also tape this interview so clients can see where they need to improve their skills.

The department takes an active role in finding jobs for its clients. It helps them find a major that best suits them, said Gallagher, and it directs them toward a major that is employment related.

Students often do not know what jobs are out there for their major, and the department helps them find part-time work or an internship.

Recently, Career Services has implemented a new service called Focus II. This is an online career exploration program that aids clients with their career searches.

Since its debut in August, Focus II has allowed students who register with Career Services an opportunity to explore resume referral programs for free.

P.J. Rodriguez, junior electrical engineering, has used Career Services to help him.

"I checked it out a couple of years ago," said Rodriguez. "They helped me find the right major and field of employment."

He said Career Services helped him land an internship.

Sarah Edwards, senior, criminal justice, also said she benefited from the program.

"I have gone in there even though I have already decided my major, and they still give me good employment advice," said Edwards.

While I attended YSU, I used this program to find the right classes and avenues for me to be successful.

Career Services assists its clients to improve their employment and life skills. This service is available for students, faculty and alumni to take advantage of.

CD Review: Willa Ford strikes the right chord

By DEBBIE TUECHE
Jambar Editor

This is not another mainstream teen pop princess. That is at least what Willa Ford sings loud and proud in her debut album, Willa Was Here.

The recent release by Lava/Atlantic Records spotlights the 20-year-old as outspoken and self-confident.

In a press release Ford explains "I'm not a cheerleader...I'm not trying to pretend to be sweet and then come out and be bad. This is who I am."

The first song titled "I Wanna Be Bad" backs up this statement. The song not only has a good beat; it also sends a message.

"I'm only saying be who you are. It's not go out and break things," said Ford. "It's really hard nowadays to be a strong teenager; there's a lot going on, so I hope my song is an outlet for them."

On the album's back cover, Ford is pictured spray painting a brick building with the titles of her songs.

This is another example of the statement she is trying to make. She desperately wants to separate her image from that of the goody two shoes.

The trend continues through her music where she voices her opinion about the pop music world.

The lyrics are catchy, but they leave the message that she is light-years away from the teenyboppers of the world.

"I mostly come up with stories from my own life," said Ford. "But I also think about stuff my friends are going through. And sometimes I just make up a character that I want to be, like 'I Wanna Be Bad.'" The album features transitions from fast to slow tempo and then back again.

The producers deserve a round of applause for a splendid mixture of music.

The album creates excellent diversity with fast tracks such as,

"Do Ya Understand That," "Don't You Wish" and something slower as, "Take the Pain Away."

Ford is a young artist with a great voice — no matter what type of person she is representing.

AVI satisfies the hunger of YSU

By FRANCINE ZELENAK

Automatic Vendors Inc., the vending company that is contracted at YSU, has its own commissary that makes the sandwiches and platters found in its vending machines.

Students can visit any of the main buildings on campus to find an AVI vending machine.

The range of prices for snacks and food in the machines is $.40 to $2.50.

Nicole Sudano, senior, education, said the vending machines at YSU are convenient for her.

"I work full-time and go to school full-time, so the vending machines are convenient to grab a bag of pretzels and a bottled water for a healthy snack when I'm on the run."

Paul Hrosch, AVI Youngstown Branch Manager said YSU is AVI's largest account in Youngstown.

"AVI gets a lot of exposure by being at YSU. It's a good premium contract for the company," he said.

Hrosch said AVI is the only vending company in the nation that makes its own sandwiches, desserts and platters.

"AVI gets very few complaints from YSU about its food," said Hrosch.

Bill Spurlazza, associate director of housing at YSU agrees.

"YSU has never had a problem with AVI. The company has a very good policy about refunding if a student has a problem," he said.

Pat Taylor, Kilcawley Center bookkeeper, said, "In order for a student to receive a refund, they "Sometimes it's easier for new people to see the good in a community and remind those living here of its potential. With a team of new leaders, we should see a lot of good news," he said.

He is encouraged by the forecast for the upcoming academic year. He has plans to meet with community leaders such as the Mahoning Valley Economic Development Corporation in the weeks ahead.

He smiled and then concluded, "This is a knowledge-based economy. It's my desire to see that knowledge going back-and-forth between the students and the corporate community to the benefit of all concerned."

Administration, said, "For us it's an important opportunity to showcase the program. The program brings students from across the state to YSU to not only learn about business and entrepreneurship but to learn about life on campus."

On Aug. 2 the students will tour local businesses, such as Schwebel Baking Co., General Motors Lordstown, Kravitz Bagels and WCI Steel, to learn how they operate.

The program will bring 100 students to YSU from many local high schools such as Austintown Fitch, Boardman, Girard, Liberty and Lakeview.

The university served as host for OBW last year for the first time, but this year the students will have the option of earning two hours of college credit.

Shelton said the students seemed to enjoy themselves last year, and she said she hopes the program will help them choose vocations and show them what a wonderful campus YSU is.

It costs $350 per student to participate in OBW, but because of donations from approximately 200 business in Ohio, each student pays $75.

Scholarships of $500 each, the Paul E. Slaughter Award and the Honda Community Service Award, will be awarded to two students nominated by the company advisers and approved by a panel of OBW judges.

How we see it

Nothing sleepy about summer strategy at YSU

YSU has an impressive list of leaders appointed during the summer semester that will serve to strengthen the academic, athletic, fiscal and enrollment goals of the university.

Steady progress has been made to bring a cohesive team of effective leaders together to lead the university in a new direction. Part of the vision for the university is to increase enrollment, and during the summer the Sweeney Welcome Center opened for the purpose of greeting and welcoming new and would-be enrollees.

Summer also saw the switch from the Midwestern Collegiate Conference to the Horizon League, opening many new avenues for competitive and academic excellence, as well as increased media coverage for our athletes. YSU's new executive director of intercollegiate athletics, Ron Strollo, a CPA, will bring a background strong in accounting to the administrative team.

Provost and vice president of academic affairs Dr. Tony Atwater, has worked in newsroom reporting and is trained in journalism. This important perspective and link will give the university an eye for global and national pulses.

Terry Ondreyka is the vice president for financial affairs, a new position created by the YSU Board of Trustees to meet the demands of current and upcoming senior staffing requirements. Thirty years of service in higher education accounting has led to this appointment and will benefit the university in its quest for accountability.

Dr. Thomas J. Vukovich was appointed the interim executive director of enrollment management, replacing Bassam M. Deeb, who moved to West Liberty State College in West Virginia. His concern is recruitment and retention, with an everyone matters approach.

Summer has also seen the announcement of plans for the dormitory complex on Wick Oval, renovations to parking decks and the shifting of some administrative offices. The opening of the pedestrian walkway connecting Kilcawley Center to the Sweeney Welcome Center gives students easy access to Wick Avenue, the Butler Museum of American Art and Bliss and Meshel halls.

It's been a very productive, strategic summer. New leaders, new buildings, new majors in some colleges, a new league and new vision. We look forward to the fruition of goals and visions of the administration in the coming semesters.

Cheap tuition: Going, going, gone

By NICK MYERS
Jambar Reporter

YSU students can rest assured their tuition is going up yet again in the coming school year.

YSU was once a college attended for its relatively low tuition; however, those days have drawn to a close.

I came to this university because of my financial situation. I'm from a middle-class income household, and I had to find the cheapest way to get an education. I never would have imagined that YSU would start becoming expensive.

Every year the common excuses range from "the state doesn't give enough money" to "it costs a lot of money to provide services for students."

Perhaps this is true. However, I must wonder if the university could possibly trim the fat somewhere.

Maybe better budgeting and money management can stem the tide of rising tuition.

It's hard to believe that an institution staffed with many well-educated men and women can ever have financial problems. You would think that the brain trust of a college — of all places — would be cognizant of the situation and would be able to handle the lack of funds.

Instead, tuition goes up, and excuses fly. It leads me to wonder whether or not I pay this university for its great excuse-making capabilities.

YSU might as well staff full-time excuse makers in case tuition rises again (and it will).

The way it appears right now, students and parents should pencil in a 5 percent increase in tuition annually for each year remaining at YSU.

Are there any benefits that come with the rise in costs?

Hardly. One would be hard pressed to find anything special coming from this increased flow of money into the university.

Parking, for example, has been a problem for students over the years. With all the students and staff who commute, parking should have been expanded in some way.

Instead, nearly everyone who desires to have a parking pass at YSU has to pay upwards of $65. The price of parking and tuition inflates, but the amount and quality of parking remain the same.

Another concern that doesn't go away with this tuition increase is cancelled and infrequently offered classes. Every semester, I have at least one class cancelled. This results in a tough and awkward schedule.

Also, I have to wait seemingly forever to find a class I need in order to graduate. I have to wait a year or two for just one class required for my degree.

This results in the pouring of more money into this university with only wasted time as a result. With the tuition increase and the high cost of classes, students should expect a better scheduling scenario.

Admittedly, YSU is still relatively low as universities go. And, the rate of tuition increase here is certainly lower than at most campuses in the state, but more can be done to keep the costs down and the students happy.

There are a lot of disappointments in the world today. Things change constantly, and we as a society need to go with the changes.

And so it goes with YSU. The days of cheap tuition are over here, and we might as well brace ourselves for the worst.

We have only fading memories of the days of cheap tuition.

Now, with costs rising this much this often, students will have to land high-paying jobs out of high school just to pay for college.

We have only fading memories of the days of cheap tuition.

Kicking the habit is not impossible

By FRANCINE ZELENAK
Jambar Reporter

Are you tired of puffing cloudy smoke into your lungs? Then prepare yourself to quit smoking and give yourself a chance for a healthier, longer life.

Smoking is responsible for about 30 percent of all cancer deaths in the United States. Fortunately, quitting smoking can reduce the risk of developing lung and other cancers.

Within 12 hours after quitting smoking the body begins to heal, according to the American Cancer Society.

The levels of nicotine and carbon monoxide decline, and the heart and lungs begin to repair damage caused by cigarette smoke.

The first step to quitting smoking is to believe you have the ability to quit. Your belief will give your mind thoughts to help you.

The next step is to take action. Create a plan to quit smoking. Set a date for quitting, and ask for support from family and friends.

If you quit and you feel as if you are going to have a relapse, contact your physician, and ask for medication that can help you.

If you have a relapse, visualize your way to quit smoking successfully. Use your mind in positive, not negative, thoughts.

Visualize what may happen in your life if you quit smoking and what may happen if you do not quit smoking.

Be aware of what triggers you to smoke. If certain people, places and events cause you to smoke, think of alternatives to these influences.

For example, if you light up a cigarette at the end of a meal, prepare yourself for something else you can do instead of smoking. You may want to take a walk or chew a piece of gum.

Reduce stress in your life. Exercising can replace your dependence on cigarettes for stress relief. Choose an exercise that you enjoy so that you do not get frustrated.

If you can't quit alone, quit with a friend. You and your friend can support each other during the hard times. Plan activities together that won't trigger smoking.

Remember to take it one day at a time, and keep a positive attitude.

You may be one of 1.3 million people this year who kicks the habit.
