WYSU announces university closing

The procedure has been developed for notifying members of the YSU community of university closings in the event of emergency snowfall conditions, Dr. John Coffelt, YSU president, has announced.

The decision to close the university, Coffelt says, is made "between 6 and 6:30 a.m., when accurate information about weather, county and city road conditions, and campus parking lot conditions becomes available.

When the decision is made to close, WYSU-FM (88.5) radio will be immediately notified. Second notification will be given area commercial radio stations. Campus security will be notified next, then all vice presidents and deans, who will then communicate the decision.

ICP aids students in designing future

by Pauline Thomas

The Individualized Curriculum Program (ICP), which enables students to design their own degree requirements, is being explored by more students than ever before, according to Dr. Robert K. Smith, assistant dean of A&S and director of the ICP.

Noting that he has received proposals from "a lot of good students," Smith reports that more students have applied to the program this fall than throughout all of last year. As of last Thursday, he says, "I've had fourteen students come in so far this week, thirteen last week, and ten the week before."

Any undergraduate student whose needs are not completely met by currently offered YSU curriculum programs may create an ICP program for a two-year or four-year degree based on his or her own background and goals.

The program was begun in mid-1973 on a three-year trial basis and initially accepted no more than twenty students per year. After three years, the ICP was approved by the Academic Senate and given permanent status.

The ICP is no longer limited to twenty students per year, but has been expanded to allow for a maximum enrollment of 100 at any given time. Smith estimates that about forty students have graduated with ICP degrees, and thirty-five to forty more are currently fulfilling programs that have been approved.

"Rather than a major and minor, let's call it a concentration area," Smith says about the ICP. That concentration area can come from any departments on campus as long as the chosen courses fit together. Smith adds that course selections can be spread quite widely.

He states that there are no strict regulations on a student's eligibility to submit a program nor on what a student may propose. His or her program should compare to regular University degrees in level and depth, and he or she is expected to have and maintain a 2.0 grade average in most students' cases.

Smith notes that a few ICP designs have been submitted by freshmen and adds, "Some have been very good proposals." All plans are required to meet the University's standard minimum of 180 total quarter hours, at least sixty of those being upper division, for a four-year degree.

According to Smith, most proposals are submitted for B.S. or B.A. degrees, and are expected to fulfill the general requirements of hours in the areas of sciences, social studies and humanities. Six hours of health and physical education are also to be included.

Students following ICP are often granted waivers in areas such as language requirements if they have had appropriate background in those areas. Older students returning to school often have life experience that serves as credit in place of course work.

Smith pointed out, however,

Funds not available

YSU daycare plans halted

by Mary Jane Klempay

A daycare center located on campus has been in the planning stage for quite a while but, apparently, it has been halted at the state level because of funds not being available, according to the State Board of Regents.

The daycare center proposals were drawn up by the home economics and elementary education departments. Dr. Dorothy Snozik, chairperson in elementary education and Dr. Mary Beaubien, chairperson of home economics, have been on campus in YSU's daycare working together to coordinate activities to incorporate the center into University class programs.

Child care technology classes and elementary education classes would benefit greatly from the combination of the center with class teaching, states David Bertelsen, assistant dean of Student Affairs. Many students in these classes are forced to go to the private centers to gain experience in working with young children, when they could be remaining on campus in YSU's daycare center. According to Bertelsen, several studies have been made concerning the need for a daycare center and there are reports showing a definite need for such a care center on campus. Bertelsen has been personally confronted on at least one occasion by a student who faced dropping out of school because there was nowhere to send her children during the day, while she was in class. ## ICP interest grows that the usual reason for waiving courses is to make room in a schedule for courses more directly related to a particular degree goal. Such courses tend to be more involved, and ICP programs can be more rigorous than standard ones. This can actually mean more hours required overall. "Sticking to regular curricula is frequently an easier way to go," Smith comments.

Smith has not found much complaint over the ICP, though, because each program is individually tailored and of the student's own design.

Smith suggests that students considering the ICP come in to see him as their first step in the process. "I can give them some guidelines on how to go about it," he says, "I can save them some time."

He adds, "I would guess one in six students probably completes it (an ICP proposal); most can go the regular route with careful use of their electives."

Even if a student should decide not to submit a proposal after discussing his or her goals, Smith states, "Most feel satisfied just to get clear ideas of what they do want to take. This makes it (such a discussion) well worthwhile even if they don't go

ICP."

Considering whether the paperwork involved in presenting an ICP proposal might be a deterrent to some students, Smith remarks, "I don't think it really takes that long. Some students have finished complete proposals in a week or two, and when you're done you'll have a program that's all your own." Smith comments that most students really need to just get a total scheme "pinned down."

A student can choose three full-service faculty members, not more than two from one department, to help him plan and carry out his program.

His or her initial proposal is studied by Smith before he or she submits it to the ICP Advisory Committee for approval.

The advisory committee is made up of ten faculty and administrative personnel and two students; both student seats are now open, and are to be filled by application through Student Government.

The dean of the college from which the student is seeking a degree gives official approval of the proposal or revises and returns it to the student and his or her advisors.

Students graduating with ICP degrees achieve specialization that can be an asset for employment or graduate school. Smith comments, "So far, no student who's completed the program that I know of has not completed his (career) goal." He says that feedback he has received from students employed or in graduate school has been all positive.

"It works both ways," he adds, though. Smith admits that in general there is some employer uncertainty as to what a student's educational background has covered with a nontraditional degree; and starting salaries are somewhat lower.

Smith feels this situation could be due in part to the fact that many schools offer programs "maybe more flexible than ours, sometimes called a bachelor of general studies," but in designing individualized programs, those schools probably take "less care than we put in."

Smith mentions that a follow-up study of the bachelor of general studies offered at Ohio University, for example, shows that a substantial number of students have settled into jobs other than what they set out to do.

Most ICP programs that have been submitted to Smith are in areas of the mass media, especially combined with business, advertising and art.

A large proportion of requests for a particular type of program is not yet likely to result in a new standard curricular offering, according to Smith, because the ICP program is still too small.

Under the ICP, students have been graduating from YSU with degrees in linguistics, environmental studies, journalism, ancient studies, ethnic art, biochemistry, computer science/biology, and even music therapy.

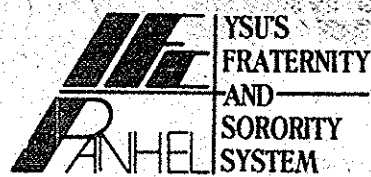

A pamphlet containing more information about the ICP and an application blank is available from Smith in Room 215 of the Arts and Science Office Building, from Dr. Earl Edgar, vice-president of Academic Affairs, and from the admissions office.

Daycare center

Bertelsen and a group of students conjunction with Student Council, it was shown that YSU is the only state university that has no daycare center provided for student use on campus.

Financial problems are the main reasons for not opening a center on campus, but, if approved, some funding could come from the state level, after approval from the Board of Regents. The state may provide some of the money for the center, if the center were run as a learning center for University students.

laugh line

by Larry Detwiler

Since it is getting so close to our nation's Independence Day, I think it only fitting and proper that something be said about contemporary American foods.

First of all, it probably is not all that close to Independence Day. However, the fact remains that cheeseburgers are the most popular food among Ohioans. People from Pennsylvania eat lots and lots of coal biscuits with milk and honey. People from Washington, D.C. eat their words and West Virginians eat worms.

When speaking of contemporary foods, one should never be too critical of others' taste buds, because there is evidence that suggests that no two fingerprints are exactly alike. For instance, Californians prefer wedding soup, ornamented with chicklets. People from Nevada, where prostitution is legalized, don't have time to eat. People from Michigan, known for their milk and cheese products, consume huge quantities of Fritos and Faygo diet root beer. People from Illinois eat fermented corn pone and a proper food in Virginia, known for its virgins, is the mustard seed.

Some foods have definite legal problems involved for various states. Sociologists report that every Hawaiian smokes marijuana and eats pills. People from Tennessee have been eating the scrapings from the bottoms of whisky barrels for so long that they can't even detect their own accents. The people in Alabama who are able to walk upright cut the foliage off trees in national parks; this is definitely illegal.

Other foods even start becoming identified with a certain area or region. How many of you didn't already know that Mississippi had delicious carp? Or Idaho and its mouth-watering fields or lobster? Not to mention New Mexico with its over-abundance of watermelons and stormdoors. But the state most well-known for a specifically favored food is Florida and its tantalizing Polish sausage flavored-

Bing Crosby grown-oranges.

People in North Dakota, primarily tough farmers, diet mostly on raw grain and tree bark. South Dakota residents, even tougher farmers, eat marshmallows and suck up insecticide. The people in Iowa, which has the toughest farmers, are all dead. Kansas residents, long time strict vegetarians, subsist on pork chops. Quite naturally, Texas inhabitants with their large natural gas reserves, love Boston baked beans.

All in all, though, American contemporary foods are pretty reasonable and certainly not influenced very much by Bhagavad-Gita, as is commonly thought. Personally, I prefer the tastes of the counter-culture state of Washington where the people are time consuming. Oh well..... Happy Independence Day.

Carter and the Shah

At an informal summit meeting held yesterday and today involving the leaders of Germany, France, Great Britain and the United States, President Carter reiterated his support for the Shah of Iran, Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. In the face of recent events and turmoil in Iran, precipitated for the most part by the Shah's refusal to step down, the President's actions seem a bit absurd.

The Pahlavi family has ruled Iran ruthlessly for centuries. The current Shah, through the use of his dreaded secret police, has continued the family rule by swift and harsh retaliation against any and all opposition. This tyranny, which has resulted in the execution and incarceration of hundreds of thousands of political prisoners, is so effective that Iranians abroad are reluctant to publicly criticize the Shah. Most recently, troops loyal to the Pahlavi regime opened fire on an anti-shah religious group, killing hundreds.

Yet, in the face of these continued atrocities and repeated violations of human rights, the United States continues its support of the Shah, even while evacuating its citizens from Iran.

This is clear evidence of the hypocrisy of the Carter administration's stand on human rights, and is a grave disappointment to those who believed that he was sincere in his pursuit of human rights for every citizen in every country throughout the world.

Misses band

To the editor of The Jambar:

I was very disappointed to see that the band didn't make the Eastern Illinois game, after the fine performances they provided during the season. I certainly feel they deserved a chance at national TV coverage as well.

More important though, I'm certain that had they attended the game the band might have offset somewhat, the hometeam's advantage by providing a hard-core rooting section that audibly might have given our team a feeling of support that would have given them the winning edge.

Scholarship Award

YSU's nominee for the 1979 Harry S. Truman Scholarship is Joseph A. Castroday, jr., A & S, announced Dr. Charles McBriary, Dean of Student Affairs.

This scholarship is awarded on the basis of merit to students who will be juniors in the forthcoming academic year and who have outstanding potential for leadership in government.

The scholarship covers room and board, tuition, fees and books up to a maximum of $5000 per year.

YSU's single nominee will compete with other nominees from Ohio colleges and universities for the single Ohio Harry S. Truman Scholarship.

The Truman Scholarship Foundation, established by Congress as the official federal memorial to honor the thirty-third President of the United States, is a permanent education scholarship program designed to provide opportunities for outstanding students to prepare for careers in public service.

Republic Steel Lot

To the Editor of The Jambar

I am writing to inform the students and faculty of this campus that the Republic Steel lot has been closed. There was no announcement of it put in The Jambar at the end of last quarter. The only way I found out about the closing when I happened to run into a friend who also parked down at Republic Steel. He found out when the lot attendant handed him a slip of paper saying "As of December 6, this lot would be closed and it would cost $20 a quarter or $1.50 a day to park."

When I called the Department of Auxiliary Services to complain I was told they were closing the lot "because it was not paying off, it costs us a $100 a day for the bus." What I'd like to know is who made that decision? Why weren't we (the people who use the lot) asked what we think? Why couldn't we have paid a small fee to ride the bus instead of doing away with it all together? Why does this institution think only of dollars and cents? There are people, human beings involved here. That bus was more than just transportation. Everyone on it got to know the regular riders.

I know once a decree has been handed down there's no way of reversing it but I'm sick of the way everything is done behind our backs around here! In addition to being good parking, we also had transportation around the campus and downtown.

When the YSU community lost the Republic Steel lot they certainly lost more than was at first anticipated when it was opened.

There was an article printed in The Jambar, page 5, Tuesday, December 5, 1978, concerning the closing of the Republic Steel Parking Lot.

Expresses disbelief

To the Editor of The Jambar

I am writing to express shock and mock disbelief at the amount of time an extreme fire hazard was allowed to exist in Ward Beecher Science Hall.

Upon reading a jambar article concerning the Rayen Hall fire, I was motivated to inspect some fire extinguishers in Ward Beecher. The article blamed the extent of the fire's spread upon used fire extinguishers not being reported as such, thus blaming the painters, those who tried to fight the fire.

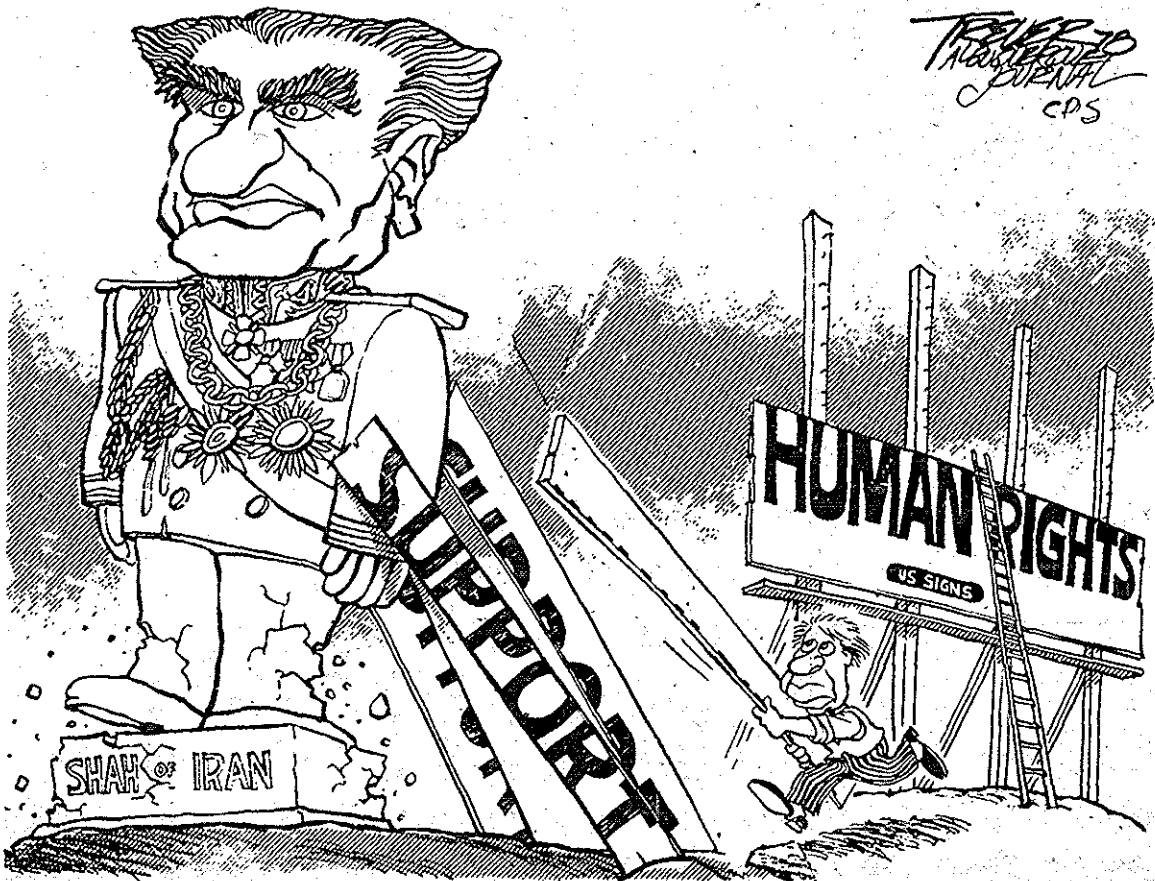

I found one discharged extinguisher which I reported to the office of Ron Aey of the Physical Plant. I then waited to see if the blame for the empty fire extinguishers belonged to the painters.

About two weeks later the empty extinguisher was taken away but not replaced. Thus for the next three weeks, or a total near five weeks, we remained unprotected.

At this later time I learned the delay could not be allowed to continue. Being new to the University I had not known this protection served the chemical storage area, but this is a known danger for fire. Certainly the delay could have been extremely costly.

After more action was taken by our department chairperson, the fire extinguisher has been replaced, and in my opinion, the blame for the extent of the Rayen Hall fire has also been re-placed, upon those to whom it belongs.

Hot shooting paces Penguin win; to face rival Zips in MCC opener

by Bill Snier

The YSU Penguins blew open a tight game in the second half and coasted to an 81-74 victory over Bellarmine Wednesday night at Beeghly Center.

The youthful squad of Dom Rosselli shot a sizzling 59.7 percent from the field for their fourth victory in seven contests.

The clever ball-handling of junior Joe Votino, the strong outside shooting of freshmen Bruce Alexander and Dave Ziegler and the strong rebounding inside by sophomore transfer Mitchell Atwood were instrumental in the victory.

"The victory was a good team effort," stated coach Rosselli. "Votino did a fine job sparking the team and bringing the ball up court against their press and Ziegler and Alexander shot well. Atwood showed good strength on the boards."

Bellarmine stepped out to a 3-0 lead early on a jumper by Bruce Olliges and a foul shot by Dwight Moore. But Alexander, Ziegler, and Atwood connected on field goals to give YSU the advantage.

Bellarmine again took back the lead on a jumper by Dwight Moore at the 10:48 mark. But the Penguins connected for six unanswered points to assume a lead they never relinquished.

Bellarmine pulled to within two points twice in the second half but could get no closer as the Penguins kept pouring it on, leading by as much as 16 points late in the game.

Dave Ziegler, as in every Penguin game this season, topped the scoring with 32 points. The former Ohio Class AA Player of the Year connected on 15 of 26 from the field and 2 of 5 from the line.

Another member of the "Fabulous Freshmen", guard Bruce Alexander, connected on 9 of 13 from the field and 2 for 2 from the line for 20 points. Mitchell Atwood also reached double figures with 14 points, but, more importantly, the sophomore from Brooklyn yanked down 14 rebounds to take game honors. Joe Votino also dished out 12 assists to go with his 7 points to aid the Penguin cause.
