YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio - Two courses to prepare individuals for the American Production and Inventory Control Society (APICS) certification exam have been scheduled by the Office of Continuing Education at Youngstown State University.

"Materials Requirement Planning" (MRP) is a process that explores master schedule requirements and/or orders through the bill of materials, using simple mathematical netting to indicate purchasing and manufacturing requirements. The nine-week course will prepare the participants for the MRP module of the APICS exam.

Classes will meet from 7:40-9:30 pm, Mondays, beginning Sept. 8 and continuing through Nov. 3. The instructor, Patrick McLeod, holds a Master's degree in business and is employed in the Production and Inventory Control Department of Rockwell International.

"Production Activity Control" will prepare participants for the Production Control module of the APICS exam. It will cover basic concepts and techniques in manufacturing systems to control the flow of raw materials and work-in-process.

Classes will meet from 7:40-9:30 pm, Wednesdays, Sept. 17-Nov. 12. Robert C. Swanson, Jr., general supervisor of the Materials Control Department of Rockwell International, will be instructor.
