YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio - A delegation of Youngstown State University students will participate in a model Organization of American States March 30-April 3 in Washington, D.C.

They will be among more than 350 students from 32 U.S. universities and the University of Ottawa participating for honors at the eighth annual event. This simulation of the proceedings and deliberations of the actual General Assembly are sponsored by the General Secretariat of the OAS.

The YSU group are members of the Youngstown Council of World Affairs, a student organization. With them will be advisor Gary Pollock of Boardman, instructor in the Department of Political Science and Social Science of YSU's College of Arts and Sciences.

Members of the delegation are:

Louis Sanchez, captain, and Nick Varveris, both of Boardman; Jerry Bryan and Steve Domonkos, Canfield; Judi Cicatiello and Ed Crepage, Austintown; Lynette Yurcho, Vienna; and Beckett Garges, Gail Seifert and Gary Lendak, all of Warren.

The model OAS General Assembly is designed to familiarize students with the procedures of an international body and the role, structure and performance of the OAS and the inter-American system. It is also a vehicle to promote understanding of the key economic, political and social issues facing the Americas today.

Add One--OAS

University delegations will represent an OAS member state, and will be briefed by that country's delegation on its official position. The delegation will then advocate the interest of their assigned country on the issues that arise during the meetings.

The students thus become acquainted with problems of the hemisphere, get a better understanding of how these countries relate, and gain a broader view of inter-American diplomacy.
