

FOR RELEASE: IMMEDIATE

Mailed July 8, 1987

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio - A series of fire detection/fire suppression seminars will be offered July 13-17 on the Youngstown State University campus.

While the free fire safety programs are primarily for University faculty, staff and their families, they are also open to area safety officials and the public.

The 90-minute sessions will include fire prevention measures, using the campus emergency system, classification of fires, effective use of fire extinguishers and evacuation procedures. Tornado safety will also be covered. Each session will include a slide presentation and a practical demonstration on using an extinguisher. There will be a question-and-answer period, and free literature will be available.

The seminars will be held in Room 2068 of Kilcawley Center from 9-11 a.m. July 13; 1:30-3:30 July 14; 9-11 a.m. July 15; 1:30-3:30 July 16; and 9-11 a.m. July 17.

The programs were designed and developed and will be conducted by Ronald P. Aey of Poland Township, associate director of YSU's Facilities Maintenance Department. He holds a master's degree in Business Administration from YSU and has completed more than 200 hours of federal and state-certified training programs in safety and health. He also acts as a consultant in this field.

Aey has been invited to present a similar series of safety seminars at the University of Cincinnati.
