TV veteran gives big government both guns

by Yvonne Stephan

"TV is a cruel medium because it shows everything," Dorothy Fuldheim, television commentator, said at a press conference just before she spoke to a large audience in the Chestnut Room Monday Evening.

The lecture was sponsored by Alpha Epsilon Rho, an honorary broadcasting society, and student government.

Beginning her career in television at the age of 54, Fuldheim has maintained 35 unbroken years in television. She currently gives a nightly commentary on a Cleveland ABC television station.

As the tiny woman walked into the Chestnut Room and sat down, only the top of her head could be seen from the back of the room but her voice was strong and distinctive.

She commented on a number of topics ranging from the economy to flush toilets.

She predicts the economy will get better if there is a tax reduction soon.

She added, "How come I'm smarter than those in Washington? Because I know that if this country wants greater prosperity and more jobs, we better have a tax reduction."

She stressed that a tax reduction would put more money into the consumers' pockets, which would result in higher profits to companies, who in the final analysis would pay more taxes. This method would result in a healthier economy.

"Inflation is a thief," she said. "It robs those least prepared."

Although she frequently mentioned America as being a great nation, she said the government has failed its people by allowing the dollar to go down from 96 cents during the Truman administration to 26 cents during Carter's.

She also said that the government has too many laws and regulations, adding that if she had a son or daughter she would recommend as a career, the interpretation of the laws.

In other areas she does not force Reagan changing the social security laws for current benefactors.

She told a story about a young man who complained about the money taken out for FICA to which she retorted, "Youth is a disease from which we all recover."

The national debt does not bother her because she said the government can borrow money from the banks in the same manner corporations do.

She said that she does not re-

Saturday, Feb. 7 brings a live painting performance featuring Al Bright and his brother Richard. The painting demonstration will be to the accompaniment of jazz music. The event will be held in the Bliss Hall Experimental Theatre (Room 1025) at 8 p.m.

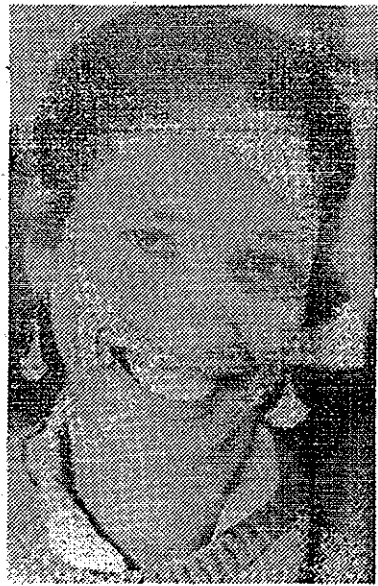

Sunday, Feb. 8 is the special guest lecturer Dr. Cheryl Johnson, at 8 p.m. in the Kilcawley Chestnut Room speaking on "Maximizing Your Potential Through Higher Education."

Dr. Johnson is presently Assistant Director of the Program of African Studies at Northwestern University. Prior to her position at Northwestern, she served as the Director of Afro-American Studies Program at Loyola University. She also taught a course entitled "Women in West Africa." Dr. Johnson received a Ph.D. in 1978, in African History from Northwestern University.

Tuesday, Feb. 10 is the "African Film Festival" in the Kilcawley Chestnut Room from 4-6 and 8-10 p.m. The film "Last Graves of Dimbaza" is the feature and the festival is free and open to the public.

Speaker berates Madison Avenue portrait of sexes

by John Celidonio

Speaking before a crowd of over 200 persons in the Chestnut Room of Kilcawley Center Wednesday night, Dr. Jean Kilbourne presented an illustrated lecture on the influence of advertising on women.

The lecture, "The Naked Truth: Advertising's Concept of Women," was sponsored by the Kilcawley Center Program Board and featured slide illustrations of magazine and newspaper ads. Kilbourne, currently a free-lance writer, recently received her doctorate from Boston University.

Kilbourne said that although everyone feels exempt from the influence of advertising, she feels that "advertising is one of the primary educational forces in our society. She said advertising is so prevalent in America that it is almost 'part of the air.'"

"Each of us," she said, is exposed to "1,000 ads a day, 50 million by age 60." She pointed out that children spend one third of their waking hours watching TV and are thus exposed to over 500 ads a week.

Kilbourne explained that ads sell the images and values of normalcy. "Certainly, advertising does reflect the views of the dominant element of the society," she said, but added that it "selects which attitudes and values to reflect."

Many of the messages are hidden, she said, and meant to be perceived only on the unconscious level. The cumulative image of advertising, Kilbourne said, is negative. "Women are shown as sex objects or demented housewives pathologically obsessed with cleanliness."

She added that the image of men is distorted too, with men being told that they must be vulnerable, dominant, and in positions of power. Advertising, she said, affects how men feel about women and themselves.

"Human qualities," Kilbourne asserted, "get divided up and labeled masculine and feminine," causing men to devalue the things that come to be labeled feminine, such as compassion. Ads are a powerful force that keeps men and women trapped in roles, she said.

Kilbourne showed a large number of slides of advertisements from magazines and newspapers but added that television ads reflect the same images.

The image of women in ads is one of flawless, inhuman beauty that cannot be achieved, she said. The look is artificial and the message is that women are ugly in their natural state, she added. More than $1 million is spent on cosmetics every hour, she noted, although many of the products are actually "hazardous to your health."

She said women are turned into objects, "hacked apart" and then grouped together as things, which she said leads to images of violence against women.

Kilbourne described the ads for feminine hygiene products as the "most offensive campaign in the history of cosmetics," adding that these products are dangerous, insulting and usually unnecessary.

Advertisers have, she said, "co-opted and trivialized the goals of the woman's liberation movement, 'equating' progress for women with narcissism and self-indulgence."

Kilbourne said another image of advertising is that "innocence is sexier," which has led to images of little girls as sex objects and seductresses. Kilbourne cited the trend of using younger and younger girls in ads and pointed out that 25% of all rape victims are under 12 years old, adding that advertising images "certainly don't help."

Kilbourne also pointed out that ads foster competition between women and a dread of aging. A new advertising stereotype, she said, is "superwoman," the working housewife. This image does not, she said, reflect the status of women in this society, where women are paid, on average, 59% as much as men and occupy 80% of the low-skill jobs.

She said ads also affect men by telling them to concentrate on work and separating them from children. Ads present a brutal image of masculinity that is harmful and destructive, Kilbourne asserted.

She cited recent trends towards violence in ads, which she said trivialize violence against women, institutionalizing it.

Although Kilbourne's humorous remarks often had the audience laughing, she urged them to "take advertising seriously."

Attorney says discrimination continues

by Cindy Baran

"Sex discrimination by employers is alive and well," local attorney Patricia Roberts told a group of 18 students at a Pre-Law Society meeting Wednesday afternoon in Kilcawley Center.

Roberts, who has dealt with a number of employment discrimination cases, pointed out that federal anti-discrimination laws have been in effect for almost 20 years. Consequently most people think since discrimination is against the law, employers don't do it anymore. "But the laws mean nothing if you don't act to enforce your rights," Roberts said.

She explained that there are currently two federal laws dealing with discrimination by employers.

Title VII, passed in 1964, prohibits discrimination in hiring or promotions based on sex, religion or national origin. The Equal Pay Act, passed in 1963, makes it illegal to pay a woman less than her male colleagues for the same work.

Roberts said Title VII also prohibits retaliation against an employee who brings a court action, although this is often difficult to prove.

A violation of Title VII unrecognized until recently is sexual harassment on the job, Roberts said. This includes taking physical liberties with female employees or demanding sexual favors to ensure promotion.

A client who wins a suit under Title VII is not entitled to damages, but can collect back pay and attorney's fees, Roberts explained. However, if there is insufficient evidence to prove sex discrimination, the plaintiff might be required to pay his employer's attorney's fees.

Roberts favors passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. "We already have the laws to combat sex discrimination on the job, but the passage of ERA will provide more of an emotional and psychological support for women," she said. Roberts added that many people who have never heard of Title VII are very familiar with ERA from all the publicity it has received.

Student groups band together; form 'communication coalition'

by Timothy Fitzpatrick

"Instead of 12 isolated ships in a stormy sea, we'll be one organized fleet that will be able to steer to safety."

That's the purpose of the Ohio Student Association (OSA), a "communication coalition" of state universities in Ohio, according to Bruce Lev, YSU's student government secretary of external affairs.

YSU received formal approval from student council here Monday for membership in the newly reorganized association. Akron, Bowling Green, Central State and Kent have not yet joined.

Lev said that the schools involved in the association will discuss similar problems and seek solutions as a joint effort. Day care and student legal assistance are two of the items representatives from YSU will be discussing with other schools.

And, although the OSA is not a lobby, the organization will be in contact with representatives in legislature concerning bills affecting students at state schools. It all 12 state schools in Ohio join the coalition, the OSA will be speaking on behalf of some 200,000 constituents, according to Lev.

Two bills currently of concern to the OSA are House Bill 18, a bill dealing with students as university trustees, and House Bill 171, which would allow the crediting of state funds to private schools to defray educational costs, Lev said.

HB 18, which would place one student on each board of trustees at each Ohio university, is being promoted by a former Ohio State University student turned legislator, Lev reported. It has failed each year, but Lev said it now has a "distinct possibility" of being passed and has the full support of the OSA.

When each university places a student with voting privileges on each board of trustees, Lev explained that students will "finally have some representation."

HB 171, unlike 18, does not have the support of the OSA, Lev said. He explained that HB 171 would provide roughly $900 to private institutions in Ohio for students who are Ohio residents to defray the cost of tuition.

This, he said, would ultimately hurt state school enrollment and funding to state schools. "We don't feel," Lev said on behalf of the OSA, "state universities can take any more cuts."

YSU, in addition to having membership in the OSA, also has active representation in that organization by Ray Nakley, student government president, and Jeff Laret, student government vice-president. Laret was appointed to the OSA Board of Directors to serve as Executive of Communication and News. His primary duties will include publishing a newsletter to be sent to all participating schools.

Nakley was appointed to the committee studying HB 18 and HB 171. He was also appointed to study the budgets of state schools and the effects of any changes in those budgets.

Editorial: Advertising's success

Is advertising harmful?

Dr. Jean Kilbourne says it is. She says it has a profound influence, especially on the image of women in our society.

This is obviously nonsense, since no one pays attention to it anyway - or do they?

Someone must, or business would not spend billions of dollars a year on it. Advertising can make or break a company.

Kilbourne calls advertising "one of the primary educational forces in our society." But what does advertising teach us?

It teaches us that the only important thing is the shine on our furniture, the car we drive, or the clothes we wear.

It teaches us that everything is for sale, that even love must be "bought." Advertising teaches we must prove our love by buying everything from cookie mix to diamonds to perfume.

Women are the biggest losers in the ad game. They are consistently portrayed as helpless, silly creatures unable to find happiness without a plastic face, the right pantyhose, jewelry, designer clothes, or whatever else the advertiser wants to sell.

And how can women fail to believe this after a lifetime bombardment of these images?

Advertising works all right. It works too well, for not only does it sell the product - it also sells the distorted values that make the sale possible.

Commentary: Let 'em eat cake - or enlist

by Timothy Fitzpatrick

At long last, the proper order of American life is to be restored!

A resurgence of patriotism, a build-up of the military to protect the American Way, the return of a truly capitalistic economy - all are a part of what we naturally expect and hope for under the new improved rule of Ronald Reagan.

These, however, are just some of the more obvious changes that will soon take place in the inevitable return to the good: old days. Another lesser known way in which the good old days will be returned to us is the return of college life to only the crusty upper class.

Gone will be the days which for too long have dominated our college campuses - the opportunity of education for all. This proliferation of population on the campuses across our nation was not so in earlier, more glorious days. Higher education then belonged exclusively to the wealthy, aristocratic types. Soon it may be so again.

Wednesday, the happy news, the beginning of the return to the natural order of life, was confirmed. Secretary of Defense, Caspar W. Weinberger, told Congress that some social programs will have to be reduced, or perhaps eliminated (we can only hope), to achieve the Reagan administration's goal of "rearming America" (a fundamental step in any return to the good old days).

And although Weinberger made no mention of specific programs to be affected (modest, no doubt, of his soon to be great achievements), Secretary of Education, Terrel H. Bell, reported that the primary area of funding cuts for education would be loans and grants to college students. This good news carries great significance.

The benefits of such a move cannot be ignored. Competition for jobs requiring a college degree will be minimal since there will be far fewer college graduates. Competition for hiring the college grads, on the other hand, will be intense.

And, naturally, any aid which remains will go to those who don't need it, which is how it should be anyway.

For those who will be forced to leave the college campuses, however, there will be sufficient employment. They will not be forgotten. You see, Weinberger also reported that the 1980's will be a "dangerous decade" and said that "the prospects of our having to employ military force directly or indirectly to safeguard our interests cannot be dismissed."

Plenty of work for those who are not quite crusty or upper-class enough.

And for those who are worried that perhaps Weinberger will not need enough monies from social services to operate the military to totally exclude those unclassy types from our nation's campuses, this statement should give heart: "I will never shrink from asking for the funds that are needed, regardless of whether they are higher than a fixed percentage or lower than a fixed percentage that someone has in mind." Any excess of aid floating around campuses can simply be scarfed up for the military if need be.

I only wish I was rich.

Lauds Carter's diligence with negotiations

To the Editor of The Jambar,
Mark Morelli's Jan. 23 "Commentary: Hostage Homecoming" describes this country's belated approval of President Carter's handling of the hostage situation.

Since the crisis ended, many Americans have now admitted that the former President's "non-violent hostage diplomacy," in Mr. Morelli's words, was best for "America's national interest in the safety and well-being of its own people." This admission now, however, is far too late.

During the past 14½ months, President Carter worked non-stop, using every possible avenue available to free our people. The negotiating process was extremely long and tedious.

One disappointment seemed to be followed by another. American trust, faith, and patience finally ran out on Jimmy Carter. As a result, the polls showed that President Carter's popularity was even lower than Richard Nixon's.

Then on Nov. 4, 1980, the one year anniversary of the embassy take over in Iran, the "silent majority" voiced its perception of Mr. Carter's judgment in the hostage situation.

Despite everything, he continued through the final minutes of his presidency to free the hostages. The prayers and hopes for the 52 Americans were answered 33 minutes after President Carter left office.

Now the truth about the secret negotiations has been revealed, all can see that the "majority" is not always right. President Carter really did do what was best for our country.

Even when frustration caused the American people to treat him with cruelty, he did not hesitate to respond with the greatest kindness he could give us; he told us the truth. For this man alone, I will always hold my deepest admiration and respect.

Says dorm life can be exciting

To the Editor of The Jambar:
Here we go again. Just another in the series of anti-dormitory publicity. In a recent Jambar issue we got stomped on again - this time after a very limited and scant survey. There are a few points we, the Resident Advisor staff of Kilcawley Dorm, would like to bring out.

First off, college life in the dorm is what you make it. The first floor meeting each of us had, we tried to point this out. Like any organization, you have to put something in to get something out. We tried to emphasize from the very start how important it is to get involved in organizations and activities.

Secondly, there are several activities that have not been tapped by many of our residents. The Resident Hall Association (dorm government) is the key to our activities. Unfortunately, there are only a few who are interested in making this organization work. It has meetings - very few attend. It had a Christmas party and has parties in the Pub - many who complain don't show up.

If people would quit complaining and get off their duffs - this organization could really be fantastic. Other activities the dorm offers this quarter include a free film series, intramurals, and its very own game room. Another point is that Kilcawley Center is connected to the dorm. Very rarely is a college's Student Union connected to a dorm. There is almost always something to do in the Center.

To summarize, life in Kilcawley Dorm doesn't have to be boring. Life in the dorm is what YOU, the residents, make of it. We, the staff, can help you get started, but it's up to you to make things happen.

Clarifies that Council, IFC compromised

To the Editor of The Jambar:
As usual The Jambar is responsible for making Student Council out to be the "bad guy". In my opinion this occurred by reporting half of the truth and not all of it. Another way of saying it is reporting half of what you hear and none of what you see.

I am referring to the article by Timothy Fitzpatrick, "Council meets formal funding woes half way."

If Mr. Fitzpatrick had done his homework he would have found out that Council did not as he put it, "refuse a request" by IFC, but had reached a compromise. The Finance Committee, acting on behalf of Council, and IFC agreed previously to the $500 rather than the originally requested

$1,000. IFC was very understanding that Council could not fund the full amount for this event due to the severe limitations and restrictions set on Council concerning the Contingency Fund by the University.

As we were told in the Finance Committee meeting, IFC had no other alternative other than the cash bar/no cover policy. Also, at the meeting was a member of Council who is also a member of a fraternity who was looking out for the best interests of IFC. In view of the monetary "crunch", IFC was grateful that we could help at all. They were extremely grateful for the $500 in addition to the previously allocated $750 for this event through their budget. Council could have refused ANY additional funding as money had been allocated in their budget specifically for Winter Formal.

From now on I would appreciate The Jambar and its reporters spending a little more time digging into the facts of an issue before it prints its paper and applying the blame where it is due.

This will avoid making a "bad guy" out of an organization that is trying its best to meet the needs of the student populous even if our hands are tied. After all, that is what Student Government is all about.

ceive much applause for her views on wage and price control but believes that controls are needed.

On other topics she stated, "I think you should spend anything you want for clothes but when a President's wife spends $10,000 for one event you are putting yourself apart from everyone."

Advertising has gone too far, she explained, when men's monogrammed "p.j.'s" are displayed because "if a man doesn't know who he is before he goes to bed then he's in trouble."

Speaking on energy and foreign policy Fuldheim said that she couldn't believe that "this great country is unable to produce an electric car that has a battery that could be recharged every 100 miles."

She added that Saudi Arabia sells a barrel of oil for between $35-40, which costs it 35 cents to produce.

Although she said she has a real fear of Russia she explained that a country which has been in power for 50 years and can't produce enough for its people especially toilet paper is in trouble.

"Flush toilets and toilet paper are a manifestation of a delicate civilization," she said in jest. Concerning job losses she said, "We have paid the price for allowing Japanese cars to come into this country with very little tariffs."

She added that American cars exported to Japan must pay $2,400 in taxes.

Two hundred thousand men are without jobs and 2,000 dealers have closed up, she noted.

"I believe in free trade but doesn't a country have a right to protect its people?" For example, Taiwan is paying 40 cents an hour for labor. "How can we compete with that?" she asked.

She commented that Youngstown was "way out of the way" and when she asked an employer at a gas station directions to the University he just looked at her in bewilderment.

She has received numerous awards including those of the United Press International for editorial excellence, the Overseas Press Club and the Woman of the decade Award.

She has also been inducted in the Ohio Women's Hall of Fame.

Before the lecture began a problem arose.

The lecture was to take place in the Ohio Room. By 7:45 p.m. the room was packed with standing room only and more people were arriving.

By 8 p.m. the decision was made to move the audience to the Chestnut Room.

Fuldheim, displeased by the 15 minute delay, commented on the incompetence of the organization.

Women dunk CSU; Grant leads scoring

by Chuck Housteau

The YSU women's basketball team won their 12th game in a row, but lost the services of senior guard Vicki Lawrence for the remainder of the season, when she broke her ankle in the game which ended in an 82-75 victory over Cleveland State Wednesday evening.

Wanda Grant poured in 32 points and hauled down an incredible 25 rebounds to pace the Penguins, who improved their record to 14-2.

Grant, who leads the team in both scoring and rebounding, was backed up by Holly Seimetz with 12 points and 11 rebounds. Denise Schwab had one of her better efforts of the season scoring 16 points. Schwab hit seven out of 10 from the field and two out of two at the foul line to help the Penguin's offense.

Cleveland State, which dropped to 10-4 on the year, was led by Dianne Foster and Karen Chaney, who combined for 49 points.

Statistically, the Penguins dominated most aspects of the game. YSU hit 50 percent of their shots and 70 percent of their free throws. YSU also held a commanding edge in rebounds, garnering 56 to only 32 for Cleveland State.

Coach Joyce Ramsey was unavailable for comment after the game, but is expected to have a tough task replacing Lawrence, the sure-handed 5-7 guard, who is usually referred to as the "spark-plug" of the Penguin attack. Cindy DiDomenico, who scored seven points Wednesday, is expected to replace Lawrence in the starting line-up.

The Penguins will face two Division I schools this weekend in Xavier and Toledo. Tonight's game against Xavier begins at 7 p.m., while the game against Toledo, Saturday night which is a preliminary to the men's game, begins at 5:45 p.m.

Senior Wanda Grant stands ready to rebound her shot. Not too many of Grant's shots turned into rebounding opportunities, however, as she was responsible for 32 of the YSU's women's points in the game with Cleveland State. (Photo by Herb Simpson)

Rosselli makes return to sidelines

by Tina Ketchum

It seemed like old times at Beeghly Center Wednesday night. The YSU basketball team won the competition with Philadelphia Textiles 43-42, and head coach Dom Rosselli was back on the bench.

Making an unexpected appearance, Rosselli received a standing ovation from the 1,523 fans in attendance during pregame activities.

The first half of the game was not what anyone could call exciting. As a matter of fact, the ball only went through the hoops a total of 18 times including free throws and field goals.

YSU was the first to score and managed to keep the edge on the visitors. At halftime, the Penguins held an 18-16 lead.

The second half was just a mite more exciting than the first, with the game going down to the last second. With 9:05 left to go, the Penguins were ahead by five but Philadelphia soon cut the gap and went in front with a 34-31 lead.

There were 50 seconds on the clock when Richard Russell connected on two free throws to bring YSU out in front again by three, but 18 seconds later, the visitors put two more points on their side of the scoreboard and led by one. It was Art McCullough who scored the winning basket with 10 ticks of the clock to go, and YSU won with a close 43-42 score.

As a team, the Penguins shot 35% from the floor and 50% from the charity stripe, but turned the ball over 16 times.

Bruce Alexander was the top scorer for YSU, scoring 12 points. Russell scored nine points for the Penguins, and McCullough had eight. Jeff Gilliam led the rebounding column as he came down with 13 and Rob Carter was credited with five assists.

The Penguins take to the hardwood Saturday in Beeghly Center as they play host to the Northern Michigan Wildcats in a key MCC encounter. Earlier in the season, the Wildcats handed YSU a 77-67 setback in Marquette, Michigan. Game time is set for 8 p.m.

Swim team loses to Indiana, Clarion; Hilk, Nisman, Hetson win for YSU

It has been a long season for the YSU men's swimming team to this point with the Penguins failing to dent the win column through their first five meets of the campaign.

On Tuesday, the Penguins dropped a 67-46 decision to Indiana (Pa.) University at the Beeghly Center Natatorium.

Bright spots for the home team were double wins posted by Tim Hilk who was victorious in the 500 and 1,000 yard freestyles, and Dov Nisman in the 200 yard individual medley and the 200 yard butterfly.

On Saturday afternoon, the Penguins took on unbeaten Clarion State and dropped a 66-39 meet at the Beeghly Natatorium. Greg Hetson was the lone dual winner for YSU, capturing the 50 yard freestyle and the 100 yard backstroke. Hilk took first place honors in the 400 yard individual medley with Nisman doing the same in the 200 yard breaststroke.

The Penguins will return action on Jan. 30 when they will host Westminster College at the Beeghly Natatorium.

YSU wrestlers continue to win despite injuries

The YSU wrestling team came home a winner in three of the five matches they took part in during the past week. But, according to head coach Norm Palovcsik, a week-and-a-half off is just what the doctor ordered for the battered Penguins.

"Although I have to be pleased with our overall record, injuries still keep hampering our performance. This break is really what we need to get us healthy again," Palovcsik said. "What we have to do now is re-group physically and mentally and then prepare for the final three weeks of the season. We have to get ready with 10 dual meets left and the Mid-East Regional still to go."

The Penguins were given the extra time off due to cancellation of the scheduled Feb. 3 meet with Mount Union College. The Penguins next meet will be a triangular match at Beeghly Center with Allegheny College and Edinboro State.

The wrestlers began the week in fine fashion by trouncing Hiram College 39-15 on the road. In that match, the Penguins received pins from Pat Day who took down his opponent in a 177 pound match in 0:52, and Rick Brunot in the heavyweight class in 7:09.

Saturday, YSU took part in a grueling quadrangular meet involving teams from Eastern Michigan, Wright State, and California (Pa.) State. While the Penguins were able to secure victories against Eastern Michigan (37-17) and Wright State (32-15), they ran out of gas against California (Pa.) State, dropping a narrow 24-20 decision.

Brunot again starred for the Penguins during the quadrangular, pinning his opponent in all three matches to bring his individual record to 32-4 including 11 pins. But injuries took their toll on the Penguins Sunday afternoon as the team dropped a 43-6 decision to invading Lock Haven State. Due to their physical problems, YSU was forced to forfeit two weight classes.

"The meet with Lock Haven was very disappointing. We had to forfeit two matches due to injuries and were able to win only one of eight matches. Lock Haven wrestled well after being beaten the night before by Cleveland State," Palovcsik said. "With Day out of the line-up, every wrestler we have on the mats now are either freshmen or sophomores. We're very young so I have to be quite pleased with the way the team has progressed. We'll get better."

Palovcsik had some special praise for the performances of Brunot. "He's 23-4 overall and has 11 pins so needless to say, he's wrestling very well. So are Rex Luckage, Jeff Saylor and Ed Black," he added.
