Spring Commencement 1999

Chancellor speaks of a decade past

■ Roderick G.W. Chu was granted an honorary doctorate of Humane Letters degree as part of Saturday's ceremony.

A sigh of relief was in the air as 895 graduates received their diplomas during YSU's spring commencement June 19.

To add to this feeling, commencement speaker Roderick G.W. Chu, chancellor of the Ohio Board of Regents, spoke of developments made throughout the decade.

As a part of commencement, Chu was granted an honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters degree.

In his speech, Chu discussed what he learned about YSU during his visit a few weeks earlier.

"I learned about the rock, although I was disappointed that I didn't have enough time to add my own layer of paint to it, and about the rich diversity of students and faculty on campus" he said.

He also talked about what he thought was the most significant development at YSU.

"I think the development of the 90s, with really the most significant impact on you while at YSU, has been your football team. In winning four national titles...the Penguins provided you with a rousing way to spend Saturday afternoons in the fall," he said.

According to Chu, the most important development of the millennium has been the university.

He said that the graduates are examples of the success of the university's primary mission to transform students' lives.

Chu himself is an example of excellence as YSU recognizes him as a chief figure in education.

According to James Scanlon,

YSU provost, Chu was selected as commencement speaker through a suggestion by Leslie Cochran, YSU president.

"He's making a significant contribution to higher education and the state through providing leadership in connection with education in grades K-12," Scanlon said.

According to Cochran, the University is interested in bringing prominent leaders to campus and let them get to know YSU as we get to know them.

"I was impressed with his pre-visit to meet with students, faculty, and staff. He was willing to listen and learn, and wanted to focus his speech toward the graduates because it was their day," said Cochran.

His life accomplishments also display that Chu always strives to be ahead of the game.

Chu, a native of New York City, has his hands full with ideas of higher education and economic development.

Graduating against all odds

■ Judi Schepka faced more than schoolwork while attending YSU.

EMILY D. CRONK
Editor in Chief

Graduation for most brings thoughts of life's greatest endeavors that are yet to come. But for one YSU student, life itself is the endeavor. Judi Schepka, senior, English, graduated Saturday against all odds.

Over the past few years, Schepka was battling more than pop quizzes and reading ten books a quarter. Her greatest challenges were passing tests. And not the ones in biology or English. These tests were for cancer.

"I began my battle with cancer in 1998 when it was discovered that I had thyroid cancer," Schepka said. "And my struggles with this disease have continued even to this point in my life. Colon cancer is the last thing I ever thought I would be facing."

Facing the pain of cancer is difficult in itself, but several YSU faculty and staff members joined together to form a support system for Schepka.

"Everyone here at the university has been so supportive," Schepka said. "Dr. Bowers came and saw me at the hospital twice, and several of my professors made my work load easier by cutting it in half. They didn't have to do that, but I appreciated it so much."

Working to stay enrolled at YSU was no easy feat for Schepka. She had to drop out in '91, after attending classes for four quarters

"She had some really rough moments and then she had some good moments ... but we tried to give her all the help and support we possibly could because she is such a wonderful person."

Leon Stennis
University Relations

when cancer was discovered again. "She had some really rough moments and then she had some good moments," Leon Stennis, university relations said. "It, unfortunately, was a day-to-day thing for her, but we tried to give her all the help and support we possibly could because she is such a wonderful person."

Schepka was able to work from her home and continue writing news stories and features for Stennis and the university relations office.

"Leon has been such an inspirational mentor and teacher for me," Schepka said. "Everyone at university relations was so helpful. And what made it even more special was that they never treated me like I was a work study student. They treated me like I was a staff member. Even when I worked from my home."

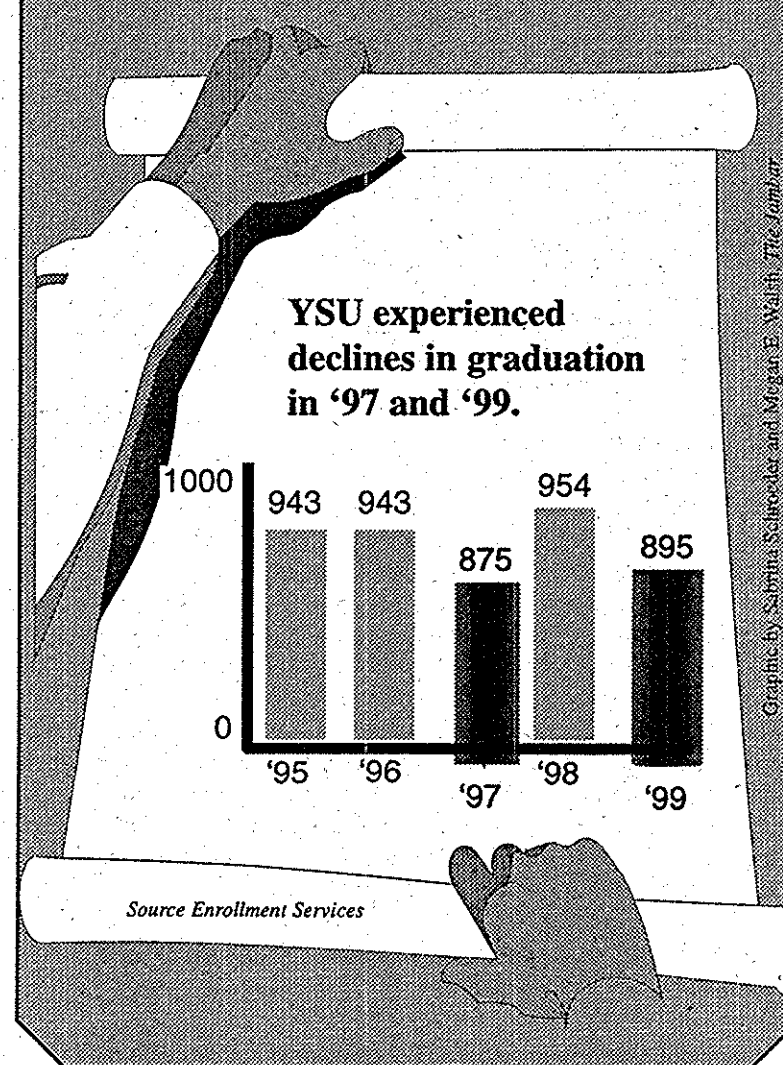

Having cancer has kept Schepka home a lot over the past few years. As of late she has to wear a special bag, which is a 24-hour chemo-pump that administers her medicine to her throughout the day.

"With all the chemo treatments, and now that I have to wear a bag, I was just so excited to have finally completed all my necessary courses that would allow me to graduate this spring," Schepka said. "I couldn't have done it without my friends and family and everyone at YSU."

Schepka received her bachelor's degree in English Saturday.

Attracting students or contractors?

The road to hell is paved with good intentions. And Campus 2000 was a good idea initially but YSU officials lost sight of what was important. They became more concerned about attracting contractors than they were about bringing in prospective students.

YSU has spent $17.5 million in state capital funds not to mention an additional $9.5 million for campus renovations and the job still isn't done.

An expansion that includes several new buildings, a few arches and prettier flowers isn't going to attract students. A better curriculum and several different majors, not already included here at YSU would.

According to university records, there are 2,273 fewer students enrolled, and 112 fewer employees since Cochran began his presidency.

YSU should've been putting their thoughts and efforts, not to mention those millions of dollars, into something that would benefit the student body and provide more jobs for the community. Instead they were worried about where they were going to plant the next tree.

YSU should worry more about the internal structure of the campus and its curriculums, rather than building new buildings and beautifying a campus for those many students who will never attend this university.

Traveling brings terrific thoughts

Whether traveling by plane, train or automobile, time spent in any mode of transportation gives way to hours of thinking terrific thoughts.

Recently, on an excursion to Tennessee to visit my boyfriend and his family, the plane trip gave me time to sit and think about the wonderful things going on in my life at this time.

Thoughts of a new job, terrific relationship, great friends and a new niece or nephew who will arrive in August traveled through my mind as the plane soared like an eagle across the sky.

I dwelled on thoughts for the three hours that I was in the sky. Five days later, the return trip home brought the same, along with thoughts pertaining to the many members of John's extended family, who were also in town at the same time as I.

Relatives from Texas, Illinois and Missouri were on hand throughout the weekend to meet and greet, eat and drink, celebrate a birthday and just simply have fun. It was one of the few times that John's father's side of the family was able to be together in the same place for an extended period of time.

I am sure anyone who knows what it is like to be bombarded with meeting the family all at one time can appreciate what I went through that weekend. Even more so considering the fact that I stayed at John's house with eight members of his family, 10 if you count his parents.

"I was told not to feel like his family was pushing us down the aisle or anything, but they were all excited to see how happy he is with his life right now."

Thankfully, my travels ended well with tearful good-byes and many wishes of seeing each other again. It was a good weekend for everyone that was there, including me.

I guess it should be taken as a good sign that aunts, uncles and cousins seemed to welcome me into their family with open arms.

I was told not to feel like his family was pushing us down the aisle or anything, but they were all excited to see how happy he is with his life right now. There have been things in the past that have led him to not have much happiness, so for his family to see him as happy as he is, and to speak about it, is a great compliment for me.

The time to travel is something that not everyone has, but I encourage everyone who can get away for even just a few days to do so.

You will be amazed at the things that flow through your mind while you await your final destination.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Professor criticizes article Opinion needs optimism

I am writing as a faculty member and former administrator to criticize the article titled, 'Faculty ratify new contract,' which appeared in the June 17 issue of The Jambar. While the article featured detailed quotes from three members of the YSU-OEA negotiating team, principles of journalistic fairness required that the reporter secure and print reactions from representatives of the university as well. Without that, the article turned out to be one-sided and left the reader ill-informed about the difficult issues which had to be addressed by the two parties in these negotiations. Moreover, the article left a number of false or misleading statements unchallenged.

A conspicuous among these were the derogatory comments attributed to Dr. Palmer-Fernandez about administrators being "out of touch with the staff" and with students. Such comments, assuming they were reported accurately, display a shocking level of ignorance, arrogance, and immaturity by an individual entrusted the responsibility of representing the entire faculty.

For his information, and The Jambar's, all department chairpersons and a number of deans stay in touch with students regularly by teaching classes and by dealing with other student matters.

For what it's worth, I wish to make it clear that I do not, share Dr. Palmer-Fernandez's views on this matter, nor do I believe, does the majority of the YSU faculty.

Stephan Hanzely
professor
Physics and Astronomy dept.

I am writing in response to the article, "Flyers offer financial opportunities for students." The author seems to assume this business opportunity is not legitimate and doesn't even give complete information about what the job entails.

Although many of these job opportunities may not be the best way to earn money, they may be the only way for some students to manage a job and a full load at school.

I understand these things must be investigated, but I feel the story puts a very negative light on the company and doesn't even give the company the chance to fully explain what it is offering.

The two students whose opinions were quoted may not have had to resort to alternative moneymaking methods.

I feel the author of the article should have put something positive in that particular piece. And if not, they should have at least included the opinion of someone who was not so doubtful.

Chinese sculptor displays replica of ancient warrior in Bliss Hall

LYNN NICKELS
Contributing Writer

There are more than 8,000 of them. Fierce, life-size, warriors lined up in battle formation. Horses and weapons at the ready.

They are the sculptures of the long-dead warriors who fought during China's Qin Dynasty more than 2,000 years ago.

Chinese artist Hou Rong, known for his replications of these famous warriors, is demonstrating his work as part of the Visiting Artist Series at Youngstown State University this week.

Hou is completing his replica of a terra-cotta warrior from Emperor Qin Shi Huangdi's tomb in Bliss Hall's new art gallery. The sculpture, on display this week in the gallery, will be moved for permanent display to the dean's conference room, said Greg Moring, YSU art professor.

A native of Beijing, Hou has been sculpting professionally for 24 years, becoming fascinated with this ancient art as a boy growing up in Tibet. He's in the process now of moving to Round Lake, Ill.

"My grandfather was from China and my grandmother was from Tibet," Hou said. "I lived for nine years in Tibet and used to watch the sculptors make Buddhas. I knew I wanted to do it, so I learned from a Buddha-maker."

Hou said he studied sculpture in middle and high school, but ended up becoming a farmer for four years. Hou eventually studied sculpture at the Xian Fine Arts Academy, graduating with a bachelor's degree in sculpture in 1973.

His love of sculpture continued to grow, taking a turn in the famous terra-cotta warriors' direction when he was asked to construct an exhibit for a museum to be built near the tomb site.

"The government wanted to build a museum and needed an artist to construct the exhibit," Hou said.

"Many artists thought it was too far to go because it was far from the city. The curator asked me to come for one year to prepare for the opening of the museum in 1979. And I said 'yes,'" he added.

Hou stayed five years, working in the tomb and restoring the warrior sculptures while he was there.

He began replicating the sculptures, and the museum asked him to stay on and make souvenirs of his replications for the museum due to the large amount of tourism.

Hou said the site was discovered by farmers in 1974. While digging a well, the farmers found fragments of body pieces of a warrior.

"They found a finger and part of a face. They thought it was Buddha underground," said Hou.

News of the find traveled quickly to the city, and an archeologist was called in, said Hou.

The huge underground tomb has since begun to be excavated, although the burial chamber itself has not yet been touched.

Three pits containing more than 8,000 life-size warriors and horses have been found to date, representing the battle formations of the Qin Dynasty army.

This is Hou's second visit to YSU. He was here in May to construct the mold for the sculpture.

A reception was held in the artist's honor Wednesday in the new Bliss Hall Art Gallery.

The Kilcawley shuffle

■ Many different things are occurring this summer inside Kilcawley Center.

SABRINA SCHROEDER
Managing Editor

More changes are happening inside Kilcawley Center this summer. Peaberry's is closed until fall, Polar Penguin has opened once again, Disc Go Round is closed and Graphic Services is moving back to the space it occupied before the addition of Disc Go Round.

Peaberry's is closed for the summer to students and faculty and will reopen for fall quarter.

K.J. Satrum, executive director of student services, Kilcawley Center, said, "Peaberry's will be used for breakfast and lunch for the kids on campus participating in the National Youth Sports Program."

With Peaberry's closed, Polar Penguin, located inside Arby's, will be open from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., to serve various coffees and ice cream treats. Before the addition of Peaberry's last year, the Polar Penguin was open every day to serve students, faculty, staff and visitors.

Graphic Services will be in place by the beginning of fall and will reoccupy the space it had before Disc Go Round came to campus.

Kathy Leeper, graphic services coordinator, said, "I have always liked change. It makes things more exciting. Everywhere we have moved has been a nice change. That is why I like being in Kilcawley, because it is always changing."

When Leeper began working with Graphic Services, the office was located on the second floor of Kilcawley Center in a u-shaped room now occupied by Pan Atlas Travel and the Women's Center.

The space now occupied by Graphic Services will eventually be turned into a paper storage room for Comdoc.

As appointed chancellor, Chu has managed state appropriations for 61 public colleges in Ohio that have received $2.3 billion this year. He also meets with the governor and General Assembly to discuss higher education, and creates programs for the 179 public and private colleges in Ohio.

"This is a great opportunity for YSU to really compete for money on their merits, respond to grant requests, and write a proposal," said Chu.

In recent accomplishments, Chu was highly instrumental in creating the Access, Success Challenge programs with YSU that froze tuition for freshmen and sophomores, and encourages "at-risk" students.

"As more 'at-risk' students graduate at YSU, the more money YSU gets," Chu said.

The Board of Regents also set up Ohiolink which links all of Ohio's college libraries to one another.

"There are 24 million books as opposed to going to some out-of-state college where there may be only a million or less," said Chu.

Elevating K-12 education is another one of Chu's missions.

Before becoming chancellor, Chu worked at Arthur Anderson and Company Consulting, was a trustee of the State of New York and was the New York State Commissioner of Taxation and Finance, all from 1971 to 1997.

Laura Massie, spokeswoman for the Ohio Board of Regents, said that the biggest turning point in Chu's life was the death of his father in 1994.

"Most of the people at his father's funeral were those whose lives he touched doing civil duties. He decided to change career paths, and that education was the key to success of making a difference," she said.

That is when Chu gave up his career at Anderson and focused his efforts on higher education and economic development. He was appointed chancellor in December 1997.

He earned his bachelor's degree in mathematics and physics from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and his master's from Cornell University.

Buechner Hall Truly Has Everything

This beautiful residence hall for women, located mid-campus at YSU, is truly first-rate. Single and double occupancy rooms are completely furnished, including linens, telephones, and free cable. The building is fully air conditioned, and staff and guards provide professional, 24-hour security. Weekly maid service, exquisitely decorated lounge areas, quiet study environment, on-premise dining room and home-cooked meals, fitness room, and laundry rooms are other features supplying their share of full-comfort living.

Sound expensive? Not at all. Thanks to the large bequest of the Buechner family, which completed the building in 1941, more than half of all residents' room rental is still absorbed by the Buechner fund. The remainder required from residents including 15 meals per week, is $837 per quarter for double occupancy and $907 per quarter for single. Payable weekly. Your inquiry is solicited.

moment for so long and what made it even nicer was the fact that I disconnected my chemo-pump for the ceremony. I didn't have it weighing me down. Nothing was going to keep me down Saturday. I'm still not giving up on any of my dreams despite my ailments." Schepka is making plans to attend YSU once again in the fall as a graduate student. "I applied for a grad assistantship and I know there's ten openings. All I can do is hope for the best," Schepka said. "After all of the warmth and support I've received here, I wouldn't dream of going anywhere else for my graduate studies but to YSU," she added.

administrators have enrolled in the degree program."

Among the 895 graduates at the June 19 commencement, 40 were graduates of the YSU/Ashtabula County Master's Degree Cohort Program.

In a prepared statement, Dr. Linda Wesson, chair of the department of educational administration, research, and foundation at YSU, said, "Based on our experience in the last three years our faculty has a high interest in returning to Ashtabula County...to serve the education community."

This program is offered through YSU's University Outreach Program, and presents courses in graduate studies for those interested in a master's degree for teachers and administrators in Ashtabula County. In September, YSU is planning to add the educational administration master's degree in order to fulfill the increasing interest in this program.

For more than 30 educational administration graduates, a post-master's degree certification will also be available to those who qualify, according to Wesson.
