YSU crime report causes concerns

■ The university is in accordance with the new law.

Think back to when you were deciding which college to attend. You probably considered many different factors in making your selection — price, services, academic quality. Safety was also probably one of the top considerations for many students when thinking about YSU. But any fears about YSU were probably set to rest by the university's high safety rate as reported by the university every year in campus crime statistics.

All colleges and universities are required by law to report crimes that occur on campus. In October, the Higher Education Act — a law that changed many current standards, including reporting of campus crime statistics — was signed into legislation.

According to the Student Press Law Center Web site, the law now "requires schools to report not just those crimes that occur on campus, but also those that occur in non-campus buildings or on property used for educational purposes, as well as public property adjacent to campus."

Mark Goodman, an attorney with SPLC, said, "The law technically went into effect when it was signed, but the Department of Education won't begin enforcing it

Penguin Review calls for student creativity

■ The deadline for submissions is Feb. 19.

CINDY MILLER
Assistant News Editor

Members of the YSU community can showcase their creative talents in the Penguin Review, a yearly publication produced by YSU students.

The magazine is now accepting submissions of short fiction, poetry, black and white or color photographs and other artwork. The deadline for submissions is Feb. 19, but Eric Murphy, editor-in-chief, said early submissions would be appreciated.

Submissions are being accepted at the Penguin Review office, Kilcawley West, behind The Jambar. All submissions must include the name, address and telephone number of the creator. Murphy said all people will be notified that their submissions have been received, even if they are not selected for publication.

Murphy said, "The former editors may have alienated people in the past by not returning their submissions and not maintaining contact with them. This year things

Local magician reaps rewards of his trade

■ Joseph Glenn, a professional magician from Youngstown, is slated to perform Monday in Peaberry's.

MICHAEL BURICH
Entertainment Editor

As the millennium approaches, the grand old art of live magic and illusions has somewhat taken a back seat to the media-saturated world of cable TV and blockbuster movies.

To make matters worse, this past year on a FOX TV special, a masked magician, who later revealed himself as the great magician Valentino, broke the magician's code and revealed many tricks of the trade, a move that audiences loved and practicing magicians hated.

Joseph Glenn, a professional magician from Youngstown slated to perform Monday in Peaberry's, was not fooled by Valentino's mask.

"[Magicians] knew who he was from the beginning. Valentino's props gave him away because, as any magician knows, a magician's trademark is his props," said Glenn.

"Magicians everywhere were in disgust watching him give away secrets," he said.

"He lost respect of magicians everywhere," said Glenn, who has been doing magic professionally for the last eight years.

Glenn does admit that any of Valentino's secrets could've been found in any library, and he does appreciate being challenged to come up with new tricks.

"I perform to keep the magic in magic. I try to keep it fresh by inventing new illusions. I came up with seven new illusions last year and I'm going to try for 11 this year," said Glenn.

While Glenn is reluctant to discuss all of his new illusions, he did describe one called the "Diabolical Dissection."

"When I perform at Peaberry's, I'm going to cut a willing member of the audience in half with a three-foot blade. It won't be my assistant or a special helper. It'll be a live member of the audience," said Glenn.

Glenn's assistant Meredith Simeington echoes his passion for magic.

"I started working for Joe in June, and it's been very different. He's a really nice guy to work for and his love for magic is unbelievable," said Simeington, who has a background in modeling and performing arts.

Glenn's roots in magic run very deep — as he is a third-generation magician.

"I learned a lot of tricks off my grandfather and father. They taught me a lot of close-up magic, one-on-one stuff," said Glenn, who began learning magic at 8 years old.

While Glenn does appreciate close-up magic acts such as David Blaine, who had a highly successful TV special, which involved him levitating on demand, his first love is big illusions.

"I do a lot of bigger illusions instead of the close-up stuff because I perform more in front of bigger audiences where that kind of magic does not work as well," said Glenn.

Glenn's passion for magic even led him to collecting prized magical historical items.

"I'm a big collector of magic artifacts. I have an original Houdini poster playbill that's the cornerstone of my collection," said Glenn.

Glenn has performed in Chicago, Philadelphia and Kalamazoo, Mich. He has opened for such comics as Pauly Shore and his friend Carrot Top.

The upcoming performance at Peaberry's was booked by Coordinator of Student Activities Greg Gulas after he saw Glenn perform.

"We were aware of Joey and he impressed us with his overall demeanor onstage and the fact that he is from the area is a plus," said Gulas.

"The key for success in this business is knowing the two things audiences want. One is to be thrilled, the other is to be fooled. I like to do both when I perform," said Glenn.

Glenn will be performing noon today in Peaberry's.

A visionary artist will be drawing guardian angels, and a special camera will take pictures of visitors' aura.

Aquarian Expo organizer Steve Tackett said 25 psychic consultants will be on hand for readings, and 23 vendors will have various paraphernalia available to the public.

Tackett said there will also be a book store, chiropractors and a kinesiologist who will be testing muscles for health and vitamin deficiencies.

"[The expo] is building quite a lot of energy," Tackett said. "There are a lot of people doing psychic fairs around the area and I've had this in mind for quite some time."

The event will showcase local businesses that specialize in holistic health and alternative medicine, he said.

The expo is from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday.

There is a $5 admission charge, and the event is open to the public.

Competitive fellowships offer other opportunities

■ A four-week summer institute will take place at Georgetown University.

CINDY MILLER
Assistant News Editor

College seniors and graduates who plan to teach American history, government and social studies can apply for a fellowship award of up to $24,000.

The fellowship is offered by The James Madison Fellowship Foundation, a federally funded program.

A nationwide competition will be held, and at least one legal resident from each state will receive a fellowship award, making it a very competitive process.

A representative from the James Madison Fellowship Foundation said two types of awards are offered. One is available to college students who are in their last year of school and are seeking their bachelor's degree in education. Fellows are required to teach American history, government or social studies in grades seven to 12.

A senior fellowship is also available for college graduates who are seeking a master's degree in American history, government and social studies. The universities they attend must be accredited. Fellows are required to teach for a minimum of one year for each academic year of assistance they receive.

The goal of the Fellowship Foundation is to strengthen instruction about the Constitution in America's schools.

The fellowship award must be used for master's degree level study of the framing and history of the U.S. Constitution.

Recipients of the fellowships could receive a maximum of $24,000 to be used for two years of full-time study toward a master's degree. The stipend would be used to pay for tuition, required fees, books and room and board.

Award recipients also participate in a four-week summer institute at Georgetown University. The institute will examine the principles, framing and implementation of the U.S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Students interested in applying must contact the James Madison Fellowship Program at 1-800-525-6928 to receive a free application package. The application deadline is March 1.

Students give lesson in free enterprise

■ Preparing for the competition gives students connections with local businesses.

ANGELA CHASEBI
Contributing Writer

YSU now has yet another reason to boast about hard-working students. Students in Free Enterprise is a program in which students from colleges and universities across the country participate.

Led by Dr. Lawrence Hugenburg, speech communication, SIFE is a non-profit organization that gives college students a chance to create different community outreach programs that teach free enterprise.

Fourteen students will represent YSU in a competition and career fair in the first week of April. If the students do well at the regional competition in Cleveland, they will go on to compete at the International Exposition and Career Fair.

At the fair, students will have a chance to meet and interact with CEO's from the top corporations in the country.

Preparing for the competition gives students connections with local businesses as well.

An advisory board including Scott Shulik, Butler/Wick Investment Company; Michael Morley, chair of the Mahoning County Democratic Party and Dr. Cynthia Anderson, vice president of student affairs, will help the team practice. The students will also be working with Junior Achievement.

In the first week of February, all 14 students will teach four area elementary schools one hour once a week for five weeks about free enterprise.

This will give the students a chance to practice for the competition and give back to the community at the same time.

The students will receive four credit hours for all their work.

Jordan should have been more considerate

The National Basketball Association has put on quite a show this season, or lack of a season. Now that an agreement has been made, Michael Jordan has announced his retirement.

Before the lock-out began, he said he would make his decision as soon as the dispute ended, but when it was all said and done, Jordan was nowhere to be found. A lot of people were made to wait on a lot of issues until Jordan made up his mind. Resigning Scotty Pippen all depended on Jordan's return, and now Pippen is going to play the game as a Houston Rocket. By the way, the season begins in about three weeks or so.

The Bulls have four players signed to play, and lord knows where Dennis Rodman will end up. And Chicago is to be ready to play in weeks and they don't even have enough guys on the team for a starting line up. How could Jordan leave a team he devoted his life to in a position like that?

There's no doubt he is the greatest player to ever take the court, but it's no excuse. He's made us stand on our feet, he's made us cheer our hearts out, he's made us believe he could fly and he's even made us cry every time he sank the Cleveland Cavaliers' hopes in the playoffs these past few years.

Michael Jordan is a basketball god, and everyone wanted to "be like Mike." We wore his shoes, we still do. We buy his clothes, his cologne and even his underwear. Even though his days on the court are no longer, Jordan is definitely here to stay. Maybe he'll even give baseball another chance.

Even though he's Mike, it's no excuse for adding to the disaster we are calling an NBA season. He's been selfish and for what the league has done for him, he owes a little more than what he's given.

Praise for police

Well, it's time for me to sing the praises of the YSU police once again, but I think they're worth much more praise than I can ever give them.

A week ago Wednesday, school was closed at 4 p.m. because of worsening weather conditions. As I carefully headed to my car in my inch-thick, rubber-soled tennis shoes, I thought I had it made once I reached the Lincoln Deck without a mishap. Wrong.

As I walked to the B1 level to my car, a patch of ice disguised as a wet spot on the cement, sent me flying and landing flat on my arm. Not a pleasant experience, especially when I thought I was home free.

My mother always taught me to report to the authorities when something like that happens. So, I made it to my car, arm and wrist aching, and drove up to the parking deck attendant to let him know. Then I drove to the YSU police building to tell them. To make matters worse, as I attempted to park in the police lot, my car got stuck sideways in the snow and ice. I was so disgusted by this time, I just left it there.

Officer Fabrizio made the report, then Chief Gocala insisted the officer take me to the hospital, so I didn't have to drive there by myself. He then insisted on he and some other officers getting my car unstuck.

Officer Benko picked me up at the hospital after my arm was x-rayed and insisted on scraping my car and warming it up for me. These officers go beyond the call of duty. They are not only law enforcement personnel looking out for the safety of those on campus, but are gentlemen and gentlewomen, as well.

Although the Campus Grounds office, which is responsible for the ice removal in the parking decks, was notified, I never even got a call to ask if I was hurt or not.

Thank goodness someone still has manners in this rude, thoughtless world. Thank you YSU PD for your continuous concern and help with regard to the human beings on this campus.

Bank policies make no sense

For years banks in America have been a trusted place for individuals to put their hard earned dollars and earn a little interest in the meantime. Many older Americans would dispute this claim considering the stock market crash of the '20s and resulting depression. I was not around to witness either of these unfortunate events in our history, yet my faith in banks is at an all-time low and dropping fast.

Several weeks ago, I went into a bank in downtown Youngstown with the intention of cashing a paycheck. I do not have an account with this particular bank, but the check I was cashing is drawn on an account at the bank. I thought, hey the check is drawn here no problem right? Wrong. While waiting in line for 15 minutes, I listened to the conversation of two tellers who, although standing at their stations, were not accepting customers.

When I finally reached the window, I handed the cashier my check and she asked if I had an account at the bank. I said no. The cashier then informed me that it would cost me $3 to cash my check at the very bank from which it was drawn.

I know the teller is not responsible for such a ridiculous rule, an obvious means of making extra money, but I had to question her. My reaction was, "Let me get this right. You charge a fee to have a checking account. You then charge a fee to cash a check from the account the holder is already paying for, that is ridiculous."

This little incident reminded me of all the reasons I do not like to deal with banks. One more incident I remember was several years ago when the first bank I had ever dealt with, "lost" a large part of my savings. Now the bank found the error, but it didn't set well with me that my bank had to "find" my money.

Fortunately, I think I have found the solution. The Credit Union. There is one right here on campus and all YSU affiliates are welcome. If you feel as I do stop in and check it out.

Racism rears ugly head again

People's ignorance is once again on the loose. Monday was Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday and for most of us there was no school in session. But do people really know why they had the day off? Some think it's because the schools have a quota of days off to give to its students. But the truth is the day was meant to be spent in remembrance of one of the greatest Civil Rights Leaders of our lifetime.

I don't pretend to be any kind of authority on who Martin Luther King Jr. was, but I do know enough to give respect to those who took the time to remember what King tried to do for this country. YSU has dedicated this week to diversity, and I'm wondering just what kind of impact that has had on the students and faculty here at YSU. I can only hope that some of the information about diversity has sunk in, and everyone who attended the programs realizes they are not perfect and they need to respect those who are different from themselves.

The fear of racism running amuck in Youngstown has reached new heights. Over the weekend, I was shopping in the mall and walking past me was a group of college-aged people who were making snide remarks about why we had Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday off. And it wasn't so much the pitch of their voices that annoyed me, but their comments. They were discussing having a "black holiday" off, and more to the point "more people should have been killed so we could have a whole week off." Can you believe the stupidity of this statement? I thought I had heard it all, but this was the icing on the cake for me. As I turned around to say something to them, I thought about the ramifications of doing so. It wouldn't have been bad to fight for a good cause. But after a quick evaluation of the situation, I realized that a fight wouldn't have solved anything. Because when someone has decided to hate someone else it is very difficult, unfortunately, to change their minds. Therefore the ignorance lives on.

I am not writing this commentary to enrage anyone about race relations but just to make people aware that there are some of us out here who hear what you say loud and clear. And we don't appreciate it. All the ignorant comments are going to do is provoke more insanity. Do we really want history to repeat itself and have more lives taken because certain individuals have been raised to hate? I know I don't. But once again, I ask the question, "What can I do to make this world a less racist place to live?"

In retrospect, I wonder what the comments in the mall would have been about if the holiday/day off was Easter or George Washington's birthday. I doubt they would have been about murdering people for a few extra days off.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Professor responds to Copeland's letter

Please permit me to respond to Dr. Copeland's letter near the end of fall quarter in the Dec. 1 issue of The Jambar.

In that letter, he reacted to my earlier comments concerning homosexuality. His nicely-written letter raised a number of interesting points, and I would like to comment on a few of them.

He began his letter by asking, "What sanctifies marriage in the eyes of God? The sex or the love?" Although that question is worth considering, the point of my letter was to think about the question raised by the phrase "in the eyes of God." Is there any authority for what is true and right, or is our universe to be understood by a vote of those with power?

In my writing, please forgive me when I use the term "homosexual." I was once gay, for example. I was happy and carefree, but with the shift in meaning of that word, I can no longer say I am gay, and I dislike using the word.

A vote on whether to allow homosexuals to marry is certainly possible and could have the power of shaping our social order. On the other hand, there are still lots of people who think this is a choice that should not be allowed because of the nature of our universe and its purpose as given by its creator. Do you see? We are back to questions of ultimate, or absolute truth.

Copeland does not represent me well in his letter. I do not "casually speak of God's truth as a matter beyond dispute."

On the contrary, being a university person makes me quite interested in thinking as deeply as possible about these things while seeking a system that provides the best possible answers and consistency with what exists.

My thinking since age 21 has brought me to trust the system of truth seen in the Jewish and Christian Bibles.

And so I want to respond to one more thing in Copeland's letter. I think it takes a severe bending of the Bible to say that it does not speak of homosexuality as being contrary to God's will. But the interesting thing about the system of truth in the Bible is that it provides a basis to believe that humans can make truly significant choices, and we can choose whether or not to view homosexuality as acceptable.

And yes, even "when God walked the earth," he spoke about homosexuality. Perhaps not directly, but still in a strong way Jesus spoke of marriage as a man and woman being united. Look, for example, at Matthew 19:1-12 and Mark 10:1-12, and consider how Jesus viewed marriage.

Let me close by saying that those who might believe what I do need to properly balance the value and importance God gives to every human being with statements and actions concerning truth.

Penguins drop two more and record in conference

MELISSA PAPPAS

The Penguin's basketball record fell to 7-11 and, while staying at 3-4 in the Mid-Continent Conference with a close loss Saturday against Oakland, 89-87.

Junior Albert Crockett poured in 22 points, but it was not enough to help the Red and White bring home a win. Crockett shot eight of 13 field goals, along with four from behind the arc and two of two from the line. He also dished out four assists.

Junior Elmer Brown shot six of 13 and three three-pointers to contribute 17 points, while sophomore Drew Hannan sank six of nine from the charity stripe to go along with his 14 points. Sophomore Ryan Patton added 11 points.

The Penguins had a one-point lead at the half, but could not hold on for the win. The win puts Oakland at 7-12.

YSU dropped another loss against Western Illinois Thursday in the Beeghly Center. Despite having five players scoring in double figures the Penguins lost a tough battle to one of the top-ranked teams in the Mid-Continent Conference.

Junior Desmond Harrison was the top scorer with 13 points and added 6 rebounds, while Crockett was close behind with 12 points and 7 assists. Harrison shot six of 12 from the floor. Brown once again showed his long distance skills by contributing 11 points, including three three-point shots.

Although the team had the lead at the end of the half, 40-35, it seemed to have lost its rhythm in the second half. The two teams went back and forth until the score was tied at 54-54. Western Illinois proved to rarely miss a shot while the Penguins did not score again until they were behind 59-54.

YSU slowly dropped behind to what seemed to be a hopeless defeat, but last minute efforts brought them back into contention. A hard battle ended in a 74-79 loss.

Hannan and senior Maurice Anderson both added 10 points and senior Devon Lewis helped with 6 rebounds and 7 assists in the effort.

Western improves to 9-9 and 4-4 in the league. The Penguins play Central State 7 p.m. Wednesday in Beeghly Center.

Women continue roll

ROCHESTER, Mich. — The women continued their winning streak this past week, rolling over Oakland 91-86 Saturday and Western Illinois, 64-47 Thursday.

Against Oakland, senior Leslie Majewski and sophomore Brienne Kenneally paced the Lady Penguins with 19 points apiece. Majewski hit six of 10 from inside the arc and a spectacular four of five from downtown. She also landed three of four from the line and handed out five assists.

Kenneally connected on six of eight from the charity stripe and sank three from behind the arc. Junior Missy Young and senior Lisa Rotunno each added 13 points. Sophomore Alyson Vogrin pulled down seven rebounds.

Facing Western Illinois, Rotunno put up 16 points, nailing six field goals and a perfect two of two from the line. Rotunno also added two blocks and two steals, while being ranked 14th in the country in three-point percentage with 45.7 percent.

Majewski added 15 points, shooting six of 14 from the floor. Young led the team with nine rebounds and Vogrin again grabbed seven rebounds.

YSU handed the Leathernecks their fourth loss in the Mid-Continent Conference, while improving their own record to 4-3 in the conference and 11-7 overall.

The Red and White will be in action at IUPUI Saturday.

Runners place at Butler

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.

— The YSU indoor track and field teams competed in the Stan Lyons Open at Butler University Saturday.

For the men, senior Paul Carter broke the school record in the 800-meter run with a second place finish of 1:51. Carter broke his previous record of 1:54, which he set earlier this season at the Kent Winter Open. Junior Denver Williams placed third in the 200-meter dash with a time of 22.1.

On the women's side, senior Laura Thomas led the team with a first place finish in the 3,000-meter run, pacing a time of 10:24. In the 400-meter dash, senior Marcella Scaife ran a time of 58.7 and earned third place. The women's 4x4 relay, consisting of sophomore Marcy Reinbolt, junior Jen Rizer, Scaife and junior Suzy Thompson placed second with a time of 4:01, setting a new school record. The old record was a time of 4:02.67, set in 1997.

Both teams will travel back to Butler this weekend for the Butler Smith Barney meet.

Swim and dive team sinks in Niagara

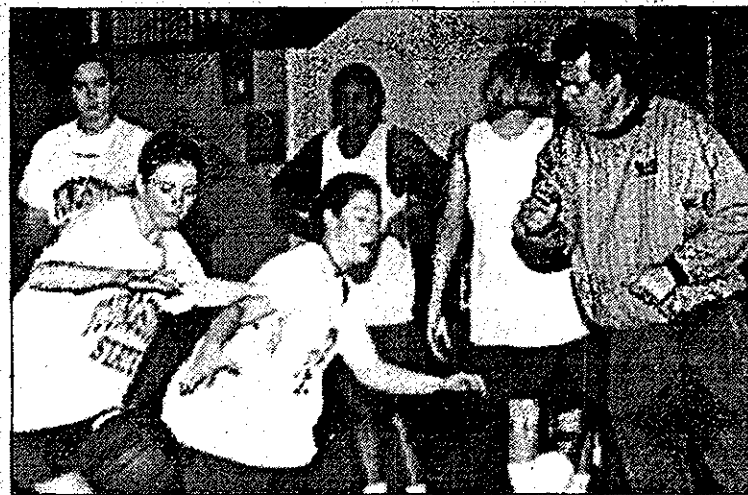

NIAGARA, N.Y. — The women's swimming and diving team lost to Niagara, 127-93, Saturday.

Freshman diver Brandi Goettsch took first place in the one-meter and three-meter diving events.

The 200-yard freestyle relay team took first place with a time of 1:50.13. The members of the relay team included freshmen Laura Katz and Alycia LaFace and sophomores Megan McAtee and Kara Humes. McAtee also took first place in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 1:05.56. Humes placed first in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:22.33.

Senior Shannon Ruby took first place in the 100-yard breast stroke with a time of 1:13.89. Freshman Amy Thompson swam a time of 12:55.33 in the 1,000-yard freestyle for a second-place finish.

YSU returns to Beeghly Friday for a meet against Clarion at 6 p.m.

until fall of 1999."

YSU is in perfect accordance with the new law, although some students are concerned the murders of YSU students Jermaine Hopkins and Chester Clardy aren't included in the crime statistics that were distributed late fall quarter.

Although neither crime occurred on campus, both happened in areas highly populated with YSU students.

"The areas off campus that are occupied by some YSU students are not YSU property," said Jack Gocala, YSU police chief. "They are however, part of the 'gray area' that the Department of Education has yet to make a final ruling on."

Hopkins was murdered outside his home on Park Avenue Jan. 28, 1996, one block away from the Lyden and Cafaro Houses. Clardy was murdered in the hallway of his apartment building on Bryson Street Jan. 29, 1998.

Goodman said there was no reason why the university couldn't include these murders in its annual crime report, but are not required to legally. He also said the Department of Education may have to clear up that gray area.

"I am doing everything I am required to do by law to make the public aware of the goings on involving campus crimes," said Gocala. "Our reports so far do not have to include anything going on outside the campus because YSU doesn't own that property. It's a shame what happened to those students, but we continue to patrol those areas and make them as safe as we can."

YSU police will continue to produce their statistics in a timely fashion and include all the necessary elements they are required by law.

"The law doesn't dictate to YSU college students where they should live, but the law does dictate to me, right now anyway, what it is exactly that I have to report on in my report," said Gocala.

He said, "The police department isn't trying to hide anything. We are making the best of an unresolved situation. We're waiting for the final ruling from the Higher Education Act. And if they tell us to document things that are going on a few blocks away we will do it."
