Odors in Bliss Hall cause complaints from students

Carbon monoxide was detected in the air, but the problem was resolved immediately.

YSU students are entering Bliss Hall at their own risk these days. With construction still going on, students are complaining of several inconveniences including illness from many different odors, dust, and a high noise level emanating from the building.

The Environmental & Occupational Health & Safety office received complaints a few months ago about a possible carbon monoxide leak in Bliss.

"We received a complaint. [The gas] turned out to be coming from the fork lifts being used by construction workers," said Leonard Perry, director, Environmental & Occupational Health & Safety.

"The lifts were being operated by propane and were letting off fumes. The construction workers didn't seem to realize what was going on at the time," he said. The construction was shut down immediately because of the fumes, and the site was investigated from Sept. 18 until Oct. 7.

Several tests were run that determined there was carbon monoxide in the air, although levels weren't high enough to cause any harm to students.

But construction workers were ordered to keep several industrial fans going at all times.

"One problem I've noticed is that the levels of dust in the building are high, and it might be causing some congestion," said Ellen DeCarlo, sophomore, studio art.

However, dust, paint and noise are not noticed in the university theater box office.

"We are surrounded by windows so we really don't smell anything, so [in the office] we're just fine," said Jessica Lauderman, senior, art. "The people being exposed to the smells and dust are on the other three floors of Bliss."

"The construction workers are doing a lot of things that are inconveniencing some students," said Perry. "But that's the price we pay to get the job done. We're not purposefully allowing people to be exposed to harmful materials. If we receive a complaint, we try and handle the situation as quickly as possible. And in this case, we cleared up the carbon monoxide gas immediately and continued to go over there to assess the situation. There was no real danger to the students."

Dean of Fine & Performing Arts Dr. George McCloud, admits the fumes from the installation of the new floor were overwhelming.

"Some months ago when the construction workers were sawing the floors they used industrial fans at the same time they were using epoxy for the floors and the levels in the air got a little higher than they should have," said McCloud.

According to John Hyden, director of maintenance and repairs of buildings, students aren't at risk to attend classes.

They are simply being inconvenienced because they have to walk around stuff and put up with some noise, he said.

"I don't think Bliss Hall is a hazardous place for students unless they are careless and fail to pay attention to the barriers and obvious needs for caution any person should observe when he or she is near a construction area," said McCloud.

Mike Coates Construction was unavailable for comment.

Removals conflict with constitution

Constitution gives no limit for "excused absences."

Student Government voted to remove five representatives since October in compliance with its constitution, said David Myhal Student Government president.

The reasons, according to Myhal were, "They didn't show up for meetings. They didn't do their jobs. We did our job by removing them."

Adam Trzynka, one of the representatives removed from office, said he had an excuse for every meeting he missed fall quarter. According to the minutes from the Student Government meeting Jan. 11, Trzynka was removed for "excessive absence."

Student Government released what it said were all the minutes from all meetings this academic year. According to those minutes, Trzynka had one unexcused absence fall quarter and one winter quarter. Although he missed several other meetings, the minutes listed him as excused.

Another representative removed for "excessive absence," according to the Jan. 11 minutes, was Chris Cicconi. The academic year's minutes show Cicconi's situation to be the same as Trzynka's.

Student Government rep says some members care

Dr. Gordon Mapley, assistant provost, and William Countryman, university registrar, spoke at Monday's meeting concerning the cancellation of classes.

If you attended a Student Government meeting this year, you may have been puzzled by the frustration on some members' faces and the long-winded discussions of simple issues. But that doesn't mean that some Student Government members aren't meeting the needs of the students, said Student Government representative Maurice Seaman.

"I've been on Student Government for four years. This may be the most unorganized Student Government I've ever seen with the exception of a few members."

There are members on Student Government who care and are committed. Tara Mauch, Zachary S. Griffith, Chantel Gonzalez and Angela Chaschi work hard for the students. If you have a problem go to these people," Seaman said. Mauch is the chair of the Financial Appropriations Committee, of which Gonzalez is also a member.

Gonzalez said the committee receives nearly 30 funding requests per quarter.

"We spend an enormous amount of time on quarterly budgets. Tara sets up interviews with the student organizations. We listen to all of the requests, then deliberate. Jason Pavone is on the committee, too. He does an excellent job, but a lot of the work he does is behind the scenes."

Gonzalez said although the budgetary process runs smoothly now, the committee is researching ways to make it more effective. Gonzalez said she has consulted other universities to possibly de-

Departments boast high placement rates

■ Placement rates vary from pre-graduation to up to one year after graduation for most degrees.

BOB EASTON

Eager high school seniors, diplomas in hand, rush to gain acceptance at the university or college of their choice. They exchange graduation robes and seniority for freshman status and insecurity. Anxiously, they dream of that time when they can again put on those graduation robes, secure in their knowledge and on their way to big bucks.

But what happens when this takes a little longer than expected? Different degrees take different amounts of time to earn, according to several deans and department chairs at YSU.

One of the quickest degrees to earn is in marketing.

Dr. E. Terry Deiderick, chair of the department of marketing, said a degree might be earned in a little more than three years. Job placement is high also.

"If a student is willing to move out of the area, I can't imagine them not having a job within a month or two [of graduation]," said Deiderick.

A marketing major who wishes to stay in the Northeast Ohio and Western Pennsylvania areas might

"Our graduates are increasingly having success."

Dr. Gary Salvner
Chair of the English Department have to wait an extra month or two for a position.

Deiderick said all businesses have a marketing function, and marketing majors can go to work at almost any company.

Some jobs Deiderick listed as career options for marketing majors were retailing, mall management, marketing research and product management.

"And that's just for starters," he said.

Dr. Gary Salvner, chair, English department, said graduates with degrees in English can get jobs immediately, and more than half have a job by the end of the first year of graduation.

"Our graduates are increasingly having success," he said.

Mathematics majors can also expect to have a job within the first year.

According to Dr. John Buoni, chair of the department of mathematics, close to 90 percent of all graduates can expect to have a job before a year has passed.

"Students can get jobs in insurance or teaching high school math. Recently, a student was hired as a statistician at Delphi Packard," Buoni said.

Not every academic program has such a rapid placement rate. History majors may have to wait for a while, said Dr. Lowell Satre, chair, history department.

"A substantial number of history students are in the College of Education. Several go into teaching or graduate school, and a few go into law school," he said. "We also offer a certificate in historic preservation."

Lowell mentioned two students who had earned master's degrees in history with the certificate, who had just earned jobs in the historical preservation field. He also said history majors could go into business, library science or government work, at places such as the Smithsonian Institute.

All academic majors have different placement rates. Depending on a student's major and job availability within an area, placement can occur almost instantaneously.

KNOW THE FACTS ABOUT BUYING YOUR TEXTBOOKS

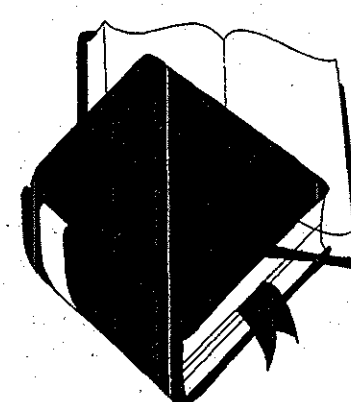

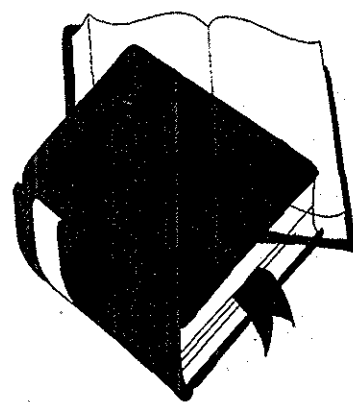

1. The majority of the publishing companies do not tell bookstores what retail price to sell textbooks. Therefore, when you see advertisements of up to "40% off retail prices," what retail price are they referring to?
2. YOU CAN'T BEAT THE PRICE OF A USED TEXTBOOK. Used books are cheaper than the up to "40% off retail prices" of new textbooks.
3. Over 60% of all textbooks sales at the YSU Bookstore, Kilcawley Center, are in used textbooks. This is rare for university bookstores. The industry average is 29.5%.
4. The YSU Bookstore, Kilcawley Center, offers you updated information regarding what textbooks your instructors are using the instant we are notified.
5. The YSU Bookstore, Kilcawley Center, offers you convenience. If you buy the wrong book, change your schedule, or drop a class, you don't have to box your textbooks, ship them back and wait for your refund.

Mauch said some student organizations have voiced concerns with the current process, which was changed from annual to quarterly two years ago. She said the committee will make a proposal to revamp the process. It may be ready for a vote in April.

Griffith is head of the Student Affairs Committee. He invited Dr. Gordon Mapley, assistant provost, and William Countryman, university registrar, to speak at Monday's meeting concerning the cancellation of classes.

The representatives discussed how to inform students of class cancellations and alternatives to required courses such as independent study and conference classes.

He missed several meetings, however, all but two were excused. Also, as with Trzynka's situation, the unexcused absences were in different quarters.

According to the constitution of Student Government, representatives may miss two unexcused meetings per quarter, a third "will result in expulsion from Student Government."

All other absences must be excused and approved by the Executive Board in order to avoid removal.

ideas initiated by the representatives may be brought to the Dean's Council by Mapley.

Gonzalez said she followed the advice of adviser Marty Manning, by focusing on one relevant issue and working toward changing it. Gonzalez has brought fourth the cancellation of classes that will be addressed in teacher negotiations.

Chasebi, Publicity Committee, has worked for five months on a survey to gauge the needs of YSU students. The survey is now posted on SOLAR.

The survey asks questions about Q2S and the GER model. Results will be in next week, she said.

Seaman said, "These people are assertive. They would make a hell of an executive board."

Seaman brought forth several other concerns.

"My honest opinion is that we haven't done anything this year. And that includes me, but I haven't been allowed to do anything. We've talked about Q2S and cancellation of classes; but you can't beat a dead horse. We don't serve office hours. When a representative brought this up, she was reprimanded by losing some of her work study hours," he said.

Seaman said, "[These comments] are not out of spite. I like everyone on Student Government, but when we're in the meeting we're not friends — we're there to represent the students. This spring, I'd like to get past the negativity and address the issues."

"The students are being cheated by Student Government when you have 25 members, but you only have five that are doing their jobs. Right now, we're not addressing the needs of the students," Seaman said.

"Part of the problem or conflict is the executive committee has taken a stand and is holding the first three meetings of fall quarter without excuses, according to the minutes from those meetings.

"Everything's a special case," said Student Government Parliamentarian Robert Harvey.

representatives responsible," said Marty Manning, Student Government adviser. "If you're going to be a representative and take on that commitment, you should at least be at the meetings."

The other three representatives removed due to absences were Danica Rendina, Mark Meno and Kamal Khanna. All three missed Cicconi.

About the other three removed, Harvey said, "None of them protested. They didn't want to be in student council at all."

Student Government maintains all five removals were conducted according to the constitution.

"We did it right. And I'd do it again if I had to," Myhal said.

YSU should distribute long-term schedule of classes to students

Registration time has come and gone once again. And many students found themselves stuck because the classes they needed weren't being offered.

This problem arises almost every quarter here at YSU, but it's something that can easily be prevented through a small effort from each department. The art department already does something to help students prepare far in advance. The department distributes a chart listing when during the year the different courses will be offered. So, if an upper-division course is only offered once a year in the fall, the student knows this as a freshman and can work his or her schedule accordingly.

This method works very well, so why don't other departments offer students this service? Not only would it help students, but it would also help the advisers who have to worry about substituting classes for students when they can't get what they need.

Some may say this isn't needed because every schedule of classes booklet has a list of tentative offerings in the back, but this is no way sufficient. Students should not have to wait until registration time the quarter before to know if a class is being offered or not. There is also a schedule posted on YSU's Web site, but we are not yet at the point where all students are able to easily access this information.

The university should do all it can to satisfy the needs of students, and this particular need has been ignored by almost every department for too long. Students' lives are hard enough without having to worry about postponing graduation because the classes they need weren't offered.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

My opinion on homosexual marriages

I would like to respond to the letters to the editor concerning the issue of homosexual marriages. I understand people have different views on this issue, but I would like to clear up some misconceptions.

The Bible is a good place to start. The Bible says homosexuality is wrong. I'm not saying that it's not. But, the Bible also says we should love and treat every person the same. The Bible also tells us we are not to judge other people. So, where in the Bible does it say we are perfect enough to pass judgment on the decisions that other people make? If someone can find where the Bible says we can pass judgment on other people, I'd like to know where you read that.

Last I heard, there was only one judge, and that is God. So, why are we trying to do his job? We are not responsible for judging other people's choices. Would we want people to judge us based on our choices? I know I wouldn't. We have to answer for our own decisions or mistakes. But, that doesn't mean we have to answer to other people. We have to answer to God and that's that.

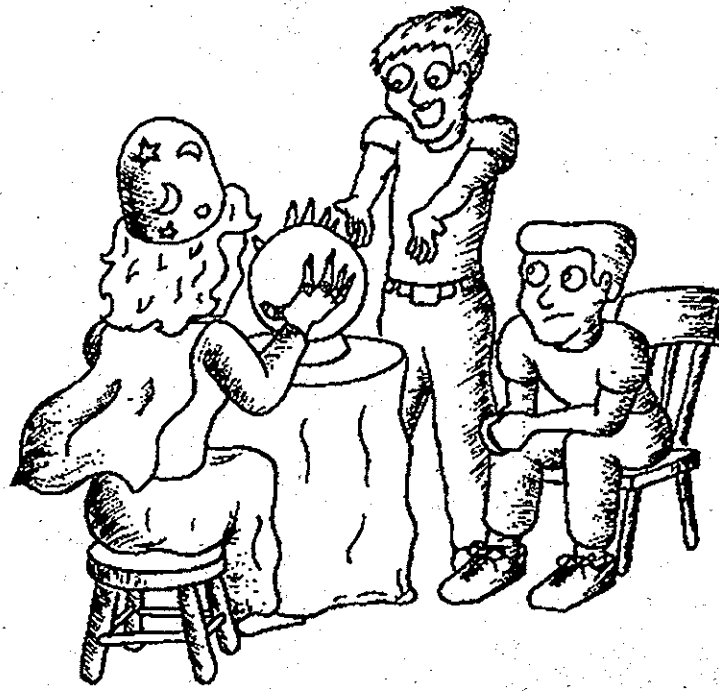

In Powell's letter, he brings up the point of how we judge a person by "sending a person to prison for murder, peddling child porn or being a serial rapist." One, this statement has nothing to do with the issue at hand. Two, the crimes he has mentioned are harmful to other people. How are homosexual marriages harmful to you, me or society? Do these marriages hurt us in any way? No.

I'm not saying I agree with the idea of homosexual marriages, but what I am saying is I don't have to agree, and I don't have to like it. But, that doesn't mean I treat that person any differently. It's time people understand you can't shape people into what you want them to be or how you want them to act. If we could do that, then no one would be themselves.

Finally, in our lives we are going to see different types of people, and we are going to be subject to different types of lifestyles. It makes me angry to know other people feel they can judge other people based on their decisions and their lifestyles. We don't have to like or agree with the decisions people make, but we have to like the person. The judgment day for all of us will come soon enough.

"Do absolutely nothing?" How in the world can someone with my hectic schedule do absolutely nothing?

Never fear, the flu can't last forever

"Ah Ah chew!"

"Bless you."

"Thanks. Can you pass the tissues, please?"

"Sure. But you look awful. Why don't you go home and get some rest."

If this scenario sounds familiar, you are probably just one of many at YSU suffering from the effects of the flu.

For the past few weeks, classrooms have been filled with the sounds of sniffing, sneezing, coughing, aching, stuffy head, fevered people. And the one thing these people all have in common is they feel guilty about being sick and missing classes and work.

Well, feeling a little guilty isn't going to help anyone feel any better. I am one of those people. Last week I missed an entire week of class and work because of the flu.

The flu this time around, according to my doctor, is violent. It will not just go away with Tylenol Flu or Dristan Cold medicine. I finally broke down on Thursday and called my doctor to make an appointment.

Of course I got in right away because the flu has been landing people of all ages in the hospital and the doctor said he wanted to avoid one more case of that if he could. So now it was "get plenty of rest and take your medicine and do absolutely nothing."

"Do absolutely nothing?" How in the world can someone with my hectic schedule do absolutely nothing?

Well, if it means within the next week

I can be completely better, then I guess I'd do it. You don't realize all the little things that must take a back seat to the flu. You can't even go to the video store for a movie when there's nothing on television but stupid stuff. And Valentine's Day, at least for me, was a complete bust.

But when all is said and done and the flu has run its course, I hope other students here at YSU have had as understanding professors and bosses as I have.

With my being sick, it's nice to know that there are other people I could rely on for getting missed assignments and keeping The Jambar afloat as far as assigning stories and filling in for me in general. So do not worry about being sick right now. One day someone you know will be sick, and they'll be the one asking you for the favors. I say bring it on. I'm ready.

Yes, we have private insurance

QUANTIA D. WATSON
Sales Manager

Another annoying fact of life has reared its ugly head. They learned to read, were allowed to vote — now this. Black people are everywhere — and they have private insurance.

Does this surprise you? Well it obviously surprises receptionists and billing clerks in suburban Youngstown. More times than I care to count, I have walked into a physician's or dentist's office for the first time and I am ignored, spoken to harshly or asked for my Medicaid card.

The worst part is that when I retrieve my St. Elizabeth, Hospital insurance card, Miss Personality behind the desk doesn't have the decency to conceal her shock. How could one square of laminated paper cause so much confusion, or threaten to close a racial gap?

After Miss Personality recovers from her astonishment, she holds out her hand to accept the Blessed Object, smiles sweetly and begins chatting amorously about the weather or other current events. If I were on welfare, I'd be no better than a dog or a rock to her.

What she fails to realize is that right now I am her equal, and soon I'll be her superior. Perhaps she does realize it, and that's what she's afraid of. It's safer for her to think of me as an ignorant project girl, rather than an educated, working woman.

There are things that separate us, but those things have nothing to do with the shades of our skin. The differences are your starting wages of $6 an hour, and mine of $8.25. I am pursuing my bachelor's degree, and you will be a receptionist still. But most importantly, at age 60, you will be buying Fixodent to cement your dentures in, so you can ask for insurance cards. I, on the other hand, will have earned a master's degree before age 30.

My mother always says it's not where I've been that counts, but where I am going. I know where I am going, to the top. I don't know the top of where yet, but the sky is my limit.

So, Miss Personality, in all of my well-educated, beautiful blackness, I'd like to help you, too. But I am afraid that there are just too many of my own people out there — and I've got to help them get insurance.
