

Bush's trip shines national media spotlight on YSU

President Bush's visit to the Youngstown State University campus last week resulted in prominent mentions of the university in newspapers from New York to Seattle.

The New York Times, USA Today, Washington Post, Chicago Tribune and the Seattle Post-Intelligencer were among the newspapers that included YSU in their stories.

The president led a 45-minute panel discussion on community health centers in YSU's Bliss Hall before an invited audience of about 250 people, including many YSU trustees, administrators and faculty.

It was the first visit by a sitting president to YSU in the campus' 96-year history.
